Back our campaign to help feed hundreds of vulnerable people in the borough

TODAY the Chronicle is launching an urgent appeal for help to feed hundreds of people in danger of going hungry in Hammersmith and Fulham this Christmas.

We are teaming up with staff and volunteers at the Hammersmith and Fulham Foodbank and encouraging our readers to donate whatever they can.

The charity expects to feed up to 200 people a week in the run-up to Christmas Day – its busiest time of the year.

Picking up a few extra items on your Christmas shop could make a huge difference to those living on the breadline.

The foodbank team will be working around the clock over the next two weeks to distribute emergency food parcels to the borough's most vulnerable families. But the charity is relying on generous donations from members of the community to keep its shelves stocked.

Daphne Aikens, founder and manager of the Hammersmith and Fulham Foodbank, said: "During the year an average of 104 men, women and children benefit from our food packages every week.

"But over the last few weeks the numbers have started to increase. We could be looking at 200 a week over the Christmas period.

"The last 10 days before Christmas is going to be very busy – we definitely want people to donate."

GPs, social workers and other care professionals can refer vulnerable individuals to the foodbank using a voucher system. The vouchers can then be redeemed at one of the borough's three foodbank stores – in Fulham, Shepherd's Bush and White City – to collect a three-day emergency food pack.

With more and more families struggling to put food on the table, the demand is continuing to rise in the borough.

Between January and November this year, around 4,500 people benefited from foodbank packs in Hammersmith and Fulham – almost 1,000 more than for the same period last year.

"We've distributed about 45,000 meals in that time – and that's not including nappies, sanitary towels and other toiletries that we also hand out," said Ms Aikens.

"We have opened a new store in Bloemfontein Road this year and that is making an impact on numbers. But the implementation of the universal credit system is also having an effect. People are having to wait so long for their benefits."

Tinned meat, fruit and vegetables are among the items most urgently needed for the foodbank stock room.

Volunteers are also appealing for soup, long-life milk and juice to top up the supplies. The team will even be handing out donated Christmas presents to families in need during the festive period.

Chronicle chief executive Philip Evans said: "It's easy to forget about those less fortunate than ourselves at Christmas. But even a few tins of food picked up on your next supermarket trip could make the world of difference to Hammersmith and Fulham's most vulnerable families.

"In the spirit of the season, please donate whatever you can to help the foodbank continue its fantastic work in our community."

Items can be donated to the foodbank's Fulham store at 67 Studdridge Street, preferably on a Monday morning.

For a full list of opening times and to make a cash donation, visit hammersmithfulham.foodbank.org.uk or call 020 7731 3693.

MP: Help cops find killer

MP Greg Hands has led calls to catch the killer behind a shock ambush shooting outside a fast-food restaurant in Fulham.

Trainee engineer Salim Coulter was gunned down as he left Jerky's in Walham Grove – only yards from one of Fulham's busiest shopping areas. Detectives have launched a murder investigation and are continuing to probe leads in a bid to track down the lone gunman.

Police said the killer had been lying in wait for the 24-year-old to emerge from the restaurant before shooting him in the head.

Mr Hands, MP for Chelsea and Fulham, said he was shocked and saddened by the murder, which happened in a normally quiet residential street. And in a direct appeal, he called for witnesses to help police track down the killer.

He said: "I urge anyone who can provide information on this crime – whether a local resident or a car driver, a pedestrian or a shopkeeper – to contact the Met."

Groundbreaking business is out to shatter stereotype

IT is often said that the home is a woman's realm – and professional childcare roles have traditionally fallen into line with the stereotype. But a pair of London entrepreneurs hope to give men a leg up in the industry as part of a groundbreaking new business.

Manny & Me is the brainchild of Jamie Leith and James McCrossen. The agency aims to offer time-poor parents the combined service of a nanny and tutor while promoting the role of men in childcare.

Around 60 per cent of the agency's workforce are men, combining the care responsibilities of a traditional nanny with educational tuition and sports coaching. Despite a surge in the number of men taking up childcare roles, Jamie and James say old stereotypes persist.

"While there are definitely more and more men entering the industry, there is still a long way to go before working in this capacity is seen by everyone as something that men and women can do equally," says Jamie.

"We still rightly have parents ask us many questions around child protection and safety but we find every family an individual specific to their needs. That can be male or female.

"With current news surrounding historic child abuse, now more than ever the profile of the right males working with children needs to be promoted so we don't go backwards and define parenting and childcare roles by gender again."

Both men have backgrounds in education and childcare. James started out as a tennis coach before moving into football, gaining a teaching degree and travelling the world with families as a private nanny. Jamie spent the last eight years teaching in primary schools in London and leading on arts and education projects across the country.

Their business model is built on the idea of offering families more than just a nanny. It serves as a platform for parents to meet multi-skilled individuals who can inform, educate and coach as well as tying the shoelaces.

"London has a wealth of great nannying and tutoring agencies," explains James. "But they are all essentially offering the same singular service. No-one is offering an individual who can be both nanny and tutor.

"Our overriding aim is to offer a service that benefits everyone – from child to parent, parent to nanny or nanny."

The agency is up and running across West London, with nannies jobbing around Fulham, Shepherd's Bush, Notting Hill, Holland Park and Marylebone.

Jamie and James believe the capital is the perfect place for Manny & Me to thrive, with thousands of hard-working parents in need of support.

London is also home to a pool of qualified teachers and top-class graduates – two groups that make up a big chunk of the agency's workforce.

The pair believe nannying can offer respite for exhausted teachers at the end of their tether in the classroom.

"Having both been primary teachers, James and I are all too aware of the pressures teachers are under today and how all-consuming the profession is," Jamie says.

"Working as a nanny or nanny can allow for a break from the classroom while continuing a role in education that can offer a different perspective on one's pedagogy. This can lead back to school or off on a different path."

Jamie and James were recently selected as Virgin Money's start-up of the week after impressing industry experts with the Manny & Me model.

Now their aim is to expand the network across London and tackle the myth that childcare is a women-only role.

"As Manny & Me grows we are seeing a community within it," says James. "Our aim is to continue to build on this and create something new and exciting for both families and nannies and nannies."

Jamie says: "In today's climate, families' time and money have to stretch further and further, as does that of graduates and educators."

"We have a number of plans on the horizon that will encourage the breaking down of long-standing barriers, hopefully working towards a more inclusive and multi-dimensional childcare industry."

Christmas comes early for schoolchildren

CHRISTMAS came early for London's Connaught Village, Hyde Park Pre-Preparatory and Preparatory School, based in Connaught Village and South Kensington, which marked the start of the festive season with a fair.

The event was complete with a real Christmas camel, Santa's grotto and singing performances from the Hyde Park School, Hawley Place School and Eaton Square School choirs.

Hosted for parents, teachers and friends of the school, as well as special guest the Lord Mayor of Westminster, the fair also featured stalls from local independent businesses and a wide array of hot food and drinks. Guests also had the opportunity to buy handcrafted gifts made by children and teachers.

Headmistress Hilary Wyatt, said: "It was great to see so many friends of the school join us in our annual Christmas celebration. It was also such an enormous honour to also have the Lord Mayor join us to enjoy this wonderful time of year."

"2016 has been another fantastic year for us – a great number of improvements have been made to ensure we keep providing the highest-quality education possible for our pupils. Today is really a day for pupils, teachers and parents to come together and champion everything that has been achieved, as well as toast the year ahead."

Hyde Park School was founded by Lady Macpherson in 1962 under the same name before changing to Ravenstone School in 1988.

Since its inception, the school has grown from a small day nursery into a 190-pupil pre-prep and prep school.

Killer cocktail of air pollution and cold weather threatens thousands

the winter weather and heightened pollution levels like those seen across the city recently could spell great danger for those at risk of breathing problems.

"All it takes is a change in the weather plus pollution and that could create a situation that puts people at risk of life-threatening asthma attacks," he said.

With winds from France blowing in more pollution recently, air-quality alerts have been issued across the capital by Sadiq Khan for the first time.

Warnings have been displayed at bus stops, Tube stations and roadsides because of high pollution levels – and parents have been warned to not to walk babies by busy roads.

According to research conducted for the British Lung Foundation, 11,677 of every 100,000 Londoners have asthma, putting the total of those most at risk at this time of the year at 1,012,862.

Mr Khan recently revealed that he is now suffering from asthma because of London's toxic air. But the mayor is now taking tough action to fight the city's pollution, with a crackdown on diesel vehicles and moves to push older polluting vehicles off the roads.

The mayor has announced that £875 million will be invested in action to improve the quality of the capital's air through to 2021-22, dwarfing the £425 million committed by the previous mayor.

Mr Khan said: "With nearly 10,000 Londoners dying early every year due to air pollution, tackling poor air quality is a public-health emergency that requires bold action. I want London to be a world leader in how we respond to the challenge of cleaning up our air, and I'm announcing that TfL will be doubling spending on improving London's air over the next five years."

"In taking action such as setting up for the world's first ultra low emission zone and purchasing only hybrid or zero-emission buses I'm ensuring that tackling air quality becomes a central part of how our transport network operates."

"London's air quality continues to breach legal levels, which is why I have taken this unprecedented action."

"The onus is now on the government to prove that they share my ambition. By funding a national diesel scrappage scheme and reforming vehicle excise duty, the government could also prove that they understand the enormity of our air-quality emergency."

The mayor's big clean-up has been supported by Dr Samantha Walker, Asthma UK's director of research and policy.

She said: "It is clear that action is needed and we welcome the extra investment to help clean up the air we breathe."

"Two thirds of people with asthma tell us poor air quality can make their symptoms worse, meaning they are at much greater risk of a life-threatening asthma attack."

"And there is strong evidence linking air pollution with the development of asthma in the first place. For some of the people in London with asthma, seemingly simple tasks like going to the shops, school or commuting to work can leave them battling to breathe on days of high air pollution."

This is the most dangerous time for asthma sufferers in London

Because of the heightened danger, Asthma UK has produced a survival guide for sufferers, which was outlined by Dr Whittamore.

He said: "During the winter, people are at greater risk of having a life-threatening asthma attack. We think this is mainly because of the falling temperatures and abundance of cold and flu viruses."

"In fact, around 90 per cent of people with asthma have told us cold and flu viruses make their symptoms worse and around 75 per cent of people find that cold air can trigger an asthma attack."

"Despite this, there are a number of ways people can keep themselves safe from asthma attacks this winter. Regular use of the preventer inhaler builds up protection in the airways over time, so that when someone encounters an asthma trigger, they are less likely to have an attack."

"People with asthma tell us the humble scarf can also be a good defence against asthma attacks."

"Cold air is a common asthma trigger, so by wrapping a scarf loosely around their mouth and nose, people with asthma can warm up the air before they breathe it in, which could potentially save their life."

"Also, it is a good idea to keep warm and dry and try to breathe through your nose rather than your mouth, as your nose is designed to warm the air as you breathe it in."

"There's good evidence to show that use of a written asthma action plan makes people four times less likely to be admitted to hospital for their asthma as well as reducing their daily symptoms. For those who don't already have one, actions plans can be downloaded from Asthma UK's website."

Dr Whittamore said asthma sufferers should "carry your reliever inhaler, usually blue, with you at all times and use your reliever inhaler as soon as you notice asthma symptoms, such as coughing, wheezing, shortness of breath and tightness in the chest. You should feel a difference to your breathing within a few minutes."

"However, if you are using your reliever inhaler more than three times a week or if your asthma is waking you up at night, it is not well managed and you should see your GP."

For more information, visit asthma.org.uk/ winter or call the Asthma UK Helpline, which is staffed by expert asthma nurses, on 0300 222 5800.

Have say on how fire service deals with terror threat

BY GEOFF BAKER

geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

SADIQ Khan is urging Londoners to have their say on how the capital's fire and rescue service deals with threats of terrorism and with flooding over the next four years.

The draft London Safety Plan, published for public consultation today, includes proposals to expand the London Fire Brigade's capacity to respond to a terrorist incident.

"Last year's Paris attacks brought the emergency services' capability to respond to a marauding terrorist firearms attack into sharp focus. Delivering two manifesto commitments, the mayor commissioned an independent review into London's terror preparedness, led by Lord Toby Harris, and a review of London Fire Brigade's resources led by Anthony Mayer," said the mayor's spokesman.

"The draft plan echoes the recommendations of Lord Harris, setting out intentions to boost the number of specialist firefighters trained to move in behind the police to fight fires and help treat casualties in a terrorist incident."

"It also proposes an extensive evaluation of the role of fire rescue units and the potential to give them attendance time targets, after Anthony Mayer's review highlighted the importance of these specialist vehicles in responding to major incidents."

Londoners are also invited to give their views on whether capability to respond to flooding should be expanded.

Mr Khan said: "Keeping Londoners safe is my first priority."

"And as the capital faces new challenges and threats, we need to make sure our fire brigade is prepared and ready to respond to whatever may be around the corner."

"This new plan sets out a series of proposals for the coming years and I encourage all Londoners to have their say in the consultation, and help make sure we are doing everything we can to keep our capital city protected."

London Fire Commissioner Ron Dobson said: "This year has been a monumental one as we've celebrated 150 years of the service firefighters have given to London. Modern firefighters face a range of challenges from road traffic collisions, to flooding and chemical spillages."

"We also need to plan for the worst. Even though we hope it never happens, we must prepare our firefighters to be part of the response to a terrorist incident."

"This consultation is a chance for Londoners to have their say on a range of work we are doing to keep Londoners safe for the next four years and how we deal with changing threats."

Other proposals in the plan include:

- In a bid to help drive further performance improvements, the brigade plans to dispatch a fire engine within 10 minutes to any incident anywhere in London 90 per cent of the time. This is an improvement on the current standard of 12 minutes on 95 per cent of occasions.

- Work to improve diversity and community relations within the brigade. Fire chiefs want to throw open the big red doors of their fire stations, allowing the community to engage more with firefighters and freeing up facilities for community use. As well as placing stations at the heart of the community, fire chiefs want to make sure their staff experience an inclusive culture in the workplace.

The consultation is on the Talk London website and will run for eight weeks. There will be seven drop-in events across London and four online meetings for Londoners to learn more about the brigade and ask questions.

Cyclists slam petition on 'dangerous roads'

BY GEOFF BAKER

geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

WESTMINSTER cyclists have reacted with fury to a petition signed by 37,000 people which blames bikes for making the roads dangerous.

The controversial petition is calling on the Prime Minister to introduce a new law compelling all of London's 610,000 daily cyclists to have the same insurance as motorists – and that cyclists have to pass a cycling test before they are allowed to ride.

The petition, on the lobby website change.org, claims that if the roads are unsafe then it's the cyclists' fault.

The petition, launched by Owen McDermott, reads: "The public roads used by motor vehicles are becoming unsafe to use due to one particular community that feel they are eligible to cycle on public UK roads. Just like having to sit your theory and your practical test to obtain a driving licence, cyclists should have to do the same. What training have they had to use the road safely?"

"Insurance, if a cyclist throws him/herself into the back of a stationary motor vehicle, who's to blame? Not the cyclist. The driver of the motor vehicle would have to pay their own excess to repair the damages.

"I'm not sure on the percentage of how many cyclists die every year due to cycling on the road but if you stick them back on the path in a cycle lane I'm sure a lot more people will survive."

Recent statistics compiled by London Assembly member Sian Berry revealed that more 900 cyclists were injured as a result of hit-and-run collisions in London during 2015. Eleven cyclists have been killed in collisions on London's roads this year.

Cyclists in Westminster have reacted angrily to the petition's claim that they are responsible for making the roads unsafe.

"This is the most ridiculous thing I have ever heard," said Sarah Green, who cycles each day to work in the West End from her home in Kensington.

"It is outrageous to blame cyclists when so many motorists are inconsiderate of us and so many lorries have been involved in so many accidents. A bicycle poses no threat to a lorry but they're saying it's our fault that there's crashes."

City worker Peter Denning said: "I cycle to work from Chelsea every day and a lot of the time the journey is terrifying because drivers pass so close or cut you up. It's crazy to say we're at fault.

"The answer is not to punish cyclists with tests and insurance but to have far fewer cars and lorries in London. If more people cycled and fewer people drove there would be a lot less pollution in this city and it would be healthier all round."

City Hall declined to comment on the petition, which will be delivered to Downing Street once it has been signed by 50,000 people.

But London mayor Sadiq Khan is showing that he's backing cyclists in the row over who should own the roads, announcing a massive investment to promote cycling in the capital.

Mr Khan is to spend a record £154 million per year on cycling over the next five years.

The investment, part of the Transport for London draft Business Plan, goes way beyond his manifesto commitment to increase the proportion of TfL's budget spent on cycling.

"This record investment will help Londoners get about quickly without having to use a car, which will benefit people's health, improve air quality and encourage the shift towards more healthy and active travel. It will also include substantial benefits for pedestrians with new pedestrian crossings and more pavement space," said the mayor's spokesman.

"Over the course of the Business Plan, up to 2021-2022, a total of £770 million will be spent on infrastructure and initiatives to promote cycling. At an average of £154 million per year, it is almost double the £79 million per year spent over the last mayoral term.

"This investment represents an average £17 per head per annum and is on a par with the cycling nations of Denmark and the Netherlands."

Mr Khan has promised "further detailed plans for making cycling a safe and obvious choice for Londoners of all ages and backgrounds".

Over the previous mayor's last term, 2.4 per cent of TfL's budget was spent on cycling. Over the course of the new Business Plan, 5.5 per cent of TfL's budget will now be spent on cycling.

"Previous cycle superhighways have been mired in controversy with criticism of consultation processes and construction not being properly co-ordinated. The new mayor has pledged to learn the lessons from the past," said the spokesman.

"This new cycling budget, which will help achieve the target of 1.5 million cycle journeys per day by 2025-26, includes the completion of phase two of the North-South Cycle Superhighway from Farringdon to Kings Cross, which will begin construction next year.

"It also includes the extension of the East-West Cycle Superhighway from Lancaster Gate and work to deliver Cycle Superhighway 11 from Swiss Cottage to the West End, which the mayor has given his endorsement for, and next steps will be announced imminently."

The Business Plan also confirms funding for two new cycle superhighways.

Consultations will begin next year on Cycle Superhighway 4 from Tower Bridge to Greenwich and Cycle Superhighway 9 from Olympia towards Hounslow, with each route also tackling a number of traffic-dominated junctions.

The record investment will deliver more joined-up cycling infrastructure right across the city, including a new cyclist and pedestrian bridge linking Rotherhithe and Canary Wharf, creating easier connectivity in the area. It will create an important connection between south-east London, Docklands and beyond, linking the forthcoming CS4 to the existing CS3 and CS2 routes north of the river.

"Having now secured record investment in cycling over the next five years, analysis will continue to be undertaken to develop a strategic cycle network that identifies potential new cycle superhighways and quietways, as well as new liveable neighbourhoods," said the spokesman.

Cycling and transport leaders across the capital have welcomed the mayor's backing of cyclists over motorists.

Ashok Sinha, chief executive of the London Cycling Campaign, said: "This unprecedented investment in cycling shows the mayor is serious about meeting his promises to triple the extent of London's protected cycle lanes, fix the most dangerous junctions and enable boroughs to implement major walking and cycling schemes.

"It will help make London a better, greener, healthier and less congested city."

Matt Winfield, London director of national walking and cycling charity Sustrans, said: "The mayor is right to secure this record investment for cycling to tackle dire air quality and improve our health, while making more efficient use of our limited road space.

"It will help more Londoners get around in a way that's easy and affordable, while making our city an even more attractive place to live, work or do business."

The Christmas tree at Paddington Recreation Ground

Rapturous applause greets turning-on of rec's Christmas lights

PADDINGTON Recreation Ground, operated by Everyone Active on behalf of Westminster City Council, threw its gates open to the public to host the 2016 Christmas tree lighting event.

The Christmas tree at the centre was purchased to support the Trees4Xmas project, which is run by the Paddington Youth Enterprise, a not-for-profit company with social-enterprise aims.

The project was set up to create employment for local youths throughout the winter months, supervised by adult volunteers, creating both social benefits and local trade.

The event saw talented local singer-songwriters Rosie Holloway and Andreas Liberios take to the stage to perform an hour of music, before the Lord Mayor Steve Summers turned the festive lights on to rapturous applause.

"Trees4Xmas is a fantastic cause and we were thrilled to see such a great turnout for the event," said Everyone Active general manager Ashton Rennie.

"It was lovely to see so many people from the local community coming together to enjoy the live music and refreshments. We hope to continue this tradition year on year."

Paddington Recreation Ground will also be holding a Trees4Xmas stall on Friday to encourage the sale of Christmas trees and wreaths to support the local project, with free mince pies and hot drinks on offer.

On Friday December 23, stalls will be erected by a number of local businesses selling last-minute Christmas gifts. Santa will hand out presents to each child who visits, and carol singers from Harrow Road Choir Group and Church Street Choir Group will be performing Christmas carols and festive songs.

Tory set to be council head

COUNCILLOR Nickie Aiken, pictured, is set to be appointed new head of Westminster City Council.

Subject to a vote by full council when it meets on January 25, Cllr Aiken is expected to be formally approved as the next leader of the council, replacing Baroness Crouthie who announced last month that she would step down in January to concentrate on her work in the House of Lords.

Cllr Aiken, the new leader of the majority Conservative group, said: "I will be humbled and proud to lead Westminster City Council if I am elected on January 25.

"Westminster is a complex and unique urban environment, but more importantly it is home to a quarter of a million people.

"As we look towards the future challenges, we must redouble our efforts to ensure Westminster secures the resources and implements the policies that deliver services our residents deserve and our one million daily visitors expect, and support our 50,000-plus businesses to thrive."

MP's appeal for witnesses to killing of trainee engineer, 24

BY JACK DIXON
jack@londonweeklynews.co.uk

LOCAL MP Greg Hands has led calls to catch the killer behind a shock ambush shooting outside a fast-food restaurant in Fulham.

Trainee engineer Salim Coulter was gunned down as he left Jerky's in Walham Grove – only yards from one of Fulham's busiest shopping areas.

Detectives have launched a murder investigation and are continuing to probe leads in a bid to track down the lone gunman.

Police said the killer had been lying in wait for the 24-year-old to emerge from the restaurant before shooting him in the head.

Mr Hands, MP for Chelsea and Fulham, said he was shocked and saddened by the murder, which happened in a normally quiet residential street.

And in a direct appeal, he called for witnesses to help police track down the killer.

He said: "I urge anyone who can provide information on this crime – whether a local resident or a car driver, a pedestrian or a shopkeeper – to contact the Met."

Salim, from White City, was shot as he climbed into the front passenger seat of a friend's car after they stopped for food at the Caribbean restaurant last Monday (December 5).

Police and ambulance teams pronounced him dead as they arrived on the scene at around 9.30pm. He was found slumped in the passenger seat of a silver and black Renault Captur with a single gunshot wound to the head. The murder happened only yards from the junction with North End Road.

The owner of Jerky's restaurant, where Salim and his friend had visited moments before the shooting, described the blood-spattered car seats outside his door.

"I didn't get that close but you could see there was quite a lot of blood on the driver's side. He was wearing a baseball cap and was slumped over the driver's seat," said the restaurant owner, who asked not to be identified.

"He was unresponsive, he'd been shot on the left hand side of his head next to his ear.

"I was right there with my staff. We were all shocked, we couldn't understand what was going on."

He said a member of staff rushed out to check Salim's pulse but that it was clear Salim was already dead.

He also said Salim's friend returned to the scene around 10 minutes later and was heard shouting "Oh, my friend is dead".

Detective Chief Inspector Noel McHugh, from the Met's Homicide and Major Crime Command, is leading the murder investigation.

He said this part of Fulham is a low crime area and that the incident had shocked the local community.

"There is a strong neighbourly spirit in the area and I would encourage the very vigilant local community to contact police with anything that they saw during and after the attack," he said.

Officers worked through the night knocking on doors and examining CCTV cameras in an attempt to uncover crucial evidence soon after the shooting.

Detectives have since appealed for cyclists and drivers to come forward and for anyone who may have recorded images on their mobile phone or camera to share the footage with police.

Appealing directly to witnesses, DCI McHugh said: "Please think back to (last) Monday night and if you were out and saw something or heard something, no matter how minor you think it might be, then please get in touch with us. "Your information could be a really important piece of our jigsaw."

Local politicians moved to reassure shocked members of the community after the murder.

Mr Hands said he had been contacted by several residents with serious concerns over safety but that police were "working hard to make sure our streets are safe".

Councillor Stephen Cowan, leader of Hammersmith and Fulham council, said: "Most of the residents I've spoken to are in shock that such a murder should have happened on this quiet residential street.

"I am very sorry for the victim's family.

"I want to reassure residents that in our first two years in office, the council's Labour administration has spent millions putting the largest ever number of council-funded police on the borough's streets in history and we have increased the borough's CCTV coverage. Our residents' safety and wellbeing is our highest priority."

Anyone with information is asked to call the Met's incident room on 020 8785 8099 or Crimestoppers on 0800 555 111.

New diabetes test for obese, pregnant women

A NEW, cheap test to identify obese women at high risk of developing diabetes in pregnancy has been devised by British scientists.

Currently all obese women are considered at risk of gestational diabetes but only a quarter go on to develop it.

Obesity is a known major risk factor for the disorder by increasing the likelihood of getting it three to five fold. It happens when high blood sugar develops during pregnancy and usually disappears after giving birth.

Although it can occur at any stage of pregnancy, it's more common in the second half and women considered at risk are given a screening test called an oral glucose tolerance test, which takes about two hours.

It involves blood tests after fasting overnight and then two hours after drinking a glucose drink. But obesity is rising and one in four UK adults is obese.

Women with the disorder require intensive antenatal care to control blood glucose and to identify other common complications, particularly foetal macrosomia – a newborn who's significantly larger than average.

The King's College London study looked at how to correctly identify obese women with heightened risk early in pregnancy so early treatment can be given.

From the many factors tested, those that predicted gestational diabetes included older age, disease in a previous pregnancy, higher blood pressure and anthropometric measures such as skin thicknesses, and waist and mid-arm circumferences.

A number of blood tests, such as haemoglobin A1c, added strength to the predictive tool.

Out of the 1,303 women in the study, 337 were affected by gestational diabetes.

Lead author Dr Sara White said: "There is currently no accepted strategy to identify obese women at high risk of gestational diabetes, early in pregnancy.

"Today, all those classified as obese are considered high risk. With escalating rates of obesity worldwide, a more accurate way of defining risk is necessary in this group.

"In this, the largest and most comprehensive study to date, we have used an extensive range of different measures to develop prediction tools."

The study was published in the journal PLOS ONE.

Mums against driverless cars for school run

AN overwhelming number of London mums have said that there is no way they would let their children go to school in a driverless car.

Although City Hall and the government have both expressed enthusiasm for the new technology, most mums do not see its appeal, according to a new survey.

The survey, by car dealership Citygate, revealed that 85 per cent of mums would not let their children be taken to school in a car that was driven by a computer.

This year, City Hall announced that it would be keen for trials of driverless cars to be held in the capital. And in April, Volvo announced that a limited number of semi-autonomous driving cars will take to the streets of London early next year, before the scheme is extended in 2018 to up to 100 vehicles.

Then-Transport Secretary Patrick McLoughlin also announced: "Driverless cars are the future of the motoring industry and we are determined that the UK leads the way in developing this new technology.

"These vehicles will make road travel safer, smoother and smarter, transforming journeys for millions of people. I expect to see thousands of these cars on London's streets in the years to come."

However, a Citygate spokesman said: "Women surveyed were less enthused by the idea of using driverless cars for school drop-offs, with just 15 per cent of female respondents saying they'd hand over their keys."

Dads are not that excited about the new cars either, with 73 per cent of fathers saying that they would not let their children be driven to school driverlessly.

However, the vehicles – a version of which is being tested at Greenwich by the Gateway Project, which claims autonomy is probably the most significant change in transport that we've seen in 100 years – did have some appeal to London motorists: 27 per cent of those surveyed said that they would use them when they were drunk.

Pub's 21,000 lights bring festive cheer

BRITAIN'S most festive pub – in Kensington – has added even more Christmas trees to its annual display this year.

The changes bring the new record to 90 trees and 21,000 lights.

The Churchill Arms is famous for its festive decorations, which took a week-and-a-half to put up and include five interior trees, reindeer lights and even stars on the roof.

Landlord Gerry O'Brien, 65, has decked out the pub with festive cheer for 32 years with a display that began with just one tree.

The pub spends more than £30,000 on decorations annually.

Some £25,000 is spent on flowers alone. The pub is adorned with hanging baskets and flower boxes in the summer.

Gerry said: "We want to make the lights look better every year and it really does make a striking impression.

"This year we've got a lovely reindeer outside the door in front of the Queen's picture, so it looks like she's taking a ride to Buckingham Palace on the sleigh.

"We've got the 18ft tree outside, five inside, and then all the others, with 21,000 lights.

"We do it for the area. It's lovely to see people's reactions, and Christmas is such a special time of year. It's only once a year and we should make the most of it and enjoy it.

"It's good for business too. People come from all over to look at the lights."

Square Mile is No 1 for arts and culture

THE Square Mile has been voted the best area in England for arts and culture.

The City of London beat two other local authorities in London – Kensington & Chelsea (second place) and Westminster (third place) to the top slot. Scarborough and West Somerset came fourth and fifth in the Index for England.

The poll by the Royal Society for the encouragement of Arts, Manufactures and Commerce is produced in collaboration with the Heritage Lottery Fund to reveal which areas are best at using heritage to foster a distinctive identity.

The annual index combines more than 120 metrics – from historic buildings to local delicacies – and measures new forms of heritage activity, such as community initiatives and volunteering, to come up with its results. Vivienne Littlechild, chairman of the City of London Corporation's culture, heritage and libraries committee, said: "I am delighted to hear that the City of London has been given top place. It confirms our firm belief that the Square Mile's cultural hub is one of our greatest assets.

"From Guildhall Art Gallery and the Barbican Centre to the Museum of London and the Guildhall School, the City of London has now become a top visitor attraction for people who take their arts and culture seriously, as well as being a global business centre."

After launching last year, the index has been adopted as an official performance measure by government in the recent Culture White Paper.

Assembly urges mayor to demand tougher action on dangerous dogs

CITY Hall is calling on the mayor of London to demand tougher action on the growing problem of dangerous dogs, following more than 300 seizures by police after attacks in the capital this year.

London Assembly members say current laws are not fit for purpose in protecting residents against dog attacks.

The assembly has passed a motion that the mayor should write to the Secretary of State for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs to request a formal review of the Dangerous Dogs Act.

The assembly believes the Act – which uses breed-specific legislation to prohibit certain types of dog – has not reduced dog-bite incidents and fails to protect dog welfare.

The Met's dangerous dogs unit has seen a seven per cent increase in dog attacks this year – and 300 dangerous dogs have been put down.

Assembly Member Steve O'Connell, who proposed the motion, said: "This is about recognising the current policies designed to protect people from dangerous dogs aren't fit for purpose, as well as improving animal-welfare standards.

"It's important that, if the current system is not working, we look at other ways of handling what is a growing problem.

"The consequences for victims of a dog attack can be devastating and I hope the relevant authorities take note of our motion."

Leonie Cooper AM, who seconded the motion, said: "It's abundantly clear that the breed-specific legislation isn't effective. We need stronger, more extensive legislation to reduce the number of dog attacks and bring irresponsible owners to justice.

"Government must work not only with the police and councils, but organisations such as Battersea Dogs & Cats Home too, to consider the best way to protect people from dangerous dogs and safeguard animal welfare.

"It's reassuring to see we have cross-party consensus over what is a really important issue."

The full text of the motion is: "The assembly notes that the Dangerous Dogs Act is 25 years old this year. It is noted that the Metropolitan Police will destroy around 300 dogs that have been seized by its officers this year.

"The Status Dog Unit, a special team of police officers only dealing with dangerous dogs, has seen a seven per cent increase in seizures in 2016.

"The Act's aim, to use breed-specific legislation to prohibit certain types of dog, has not reduced dog-bite incidents or the number of prohibited types of dog. The assembly accepts that BSL has not had a positive impact on improving human safety or protecting dog welfare.

"The assembly notes that other authorities have started to review and overturn BSL such as the Netherlands, Italy and Lower Saxony, Germany, and have identified other ways of reducing dog-bite incidents.

"The assembly calls on the mayor to write to the Secretary of State for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs asking for a formal review of the legislation as proposed by the RSPCA and for London bodies such as the Metropolitan Police, Battersea Dogs & Cats Home, the stray dog services of the London boroughs and relevant non-governmental organisations to be part of this review."

'I couldn't get a game after I snubbed pervert footy coach'

AN ex-footballer who played for Leyton Orient has also claimed he was abused by former Chelsea chief scout Eddie Heath when he was 15 years old.

Peter Hodges, now 69, has told of occasions he spent "uncomfortable" evenings alone with Heath at his flat in Norman Road, Leytonstone.

Mr Hodges, of Leigh, Essex, was taken on by the football club as a teenager in the early 1960s.

He first met Heath at the Leyton Orient football ground and he was then invited to the coach's home.

Mr Hodges said: "Eddie Heath was quite friendly with everyone. It was first-name terms, laughing and joking in the changing rooms.

"He asked me to go around his place - I was about 15 at the time and I did not know any different.

"It was quite genial. He gave me a drink of pop and a magazine while he potted around in the background."

However, Mr Hodges said Heath's behaviour became increasingly strange as time went on.

Mr Hodges said: "I had left school by then and he told me to pack up my job and he would get me on the ground staff, which was the first step to becoming a player back then.

"I left my job but the manager at the time, Johnny Carey, came to my parents' house and said Eddie had jumped the gun and I couldn't get on the ground staff until I had done a bit more training."

Mr Hodges says he later stopped visiting Heath at his flat after he was trapped on the sofa by the coach.

"The last time I went to see him at his flat he got a little bit too close for comfort," said Mr Hodges.

"He pressed me against the arm of the sofa.

"I couldn't move - he was a big man. I couldn't tell whether he'd touched my genitals or not but it was horrible - he was certainly assaulting me physically.

"I became very uncomfortable and I just thought it wasn't right and I wouldn't go around there any more. After that, all of a sudden I couldn't get a kick of a football, I couldn't get a game."

Former Chelsea striker Gary Johnson alleged last week he was sexually assaulted by Heath while Heath worked as a scout for the Stamford Bridge side in the 1970s.

Jimmy Scott, an Orient captain when Heath worked at Brisbane Road, has also stepped forward to claim the coach was a known child abuser during his time at the East London club.

Heath died in the mid-1980s long before claims about his conduct first surfaced.

Leyton Orient Football Club has refused to comment on allegations surrounding Heath at this time, due to ongoing police investigations into historic child sex abuse at clubs across London.

Mr Hodges, who later played in the Tottenham Hotspur youth side but never signed a professional contract, says he wants the public to understand the scale of the abuse carried out by Heath.

"We were all young lads and all we wanted to do was play professional football," said Mr Hodges.

"It is by the grace of God I did not go around to his flat again.

"I just knew he wasn't right. I knew he had gone to Chelsea and when this all started it made me feel sick. I said to my wife 'I bet it was Eddie Heath'.

"I just want it out there that this was happening even in the early 1960s. It was going on long before the 1970s."

Mr Hodges has reported his story to the hotline, set up in the wake of the national scandal, to allow footballers to report abuse.

Crossrail firms face court over worker's death

THREE Crossrail construction firms are to be prosecuted after one worker died and two were seriously injured working on the project.

Crossrail connects East London and West London with tunnelling under Central London and is billed Europe's largest construction project.

Rene Tkačik was crushed to death by falling concrete on March 7 2014 while working on the Fisher Street crossover tunnel.

Terrance "Ian" Hughes was crushed by a tipper truck and suffered severe leg injuries while working between the Bond Street and Paddington section of the tunnel on January 16 2015.

Six days later Alex Viziutu was working in the same stretch of the tunnel when he suffered head and hip injuries when he was struck by a high-pressure mixture of water and concrete during a routine operation to clean concrete lines.

The Health & Safety Executive informed BAM Nuttall Limited, Ferrovia Agroman (UK) Ltd and Keir Infrastructure & Overseas Ltd that they will be prosecuted.

HSE's head of operations Annette Hall said: "We have informed the three contractors that they will each be prosecuted for the death of a worker and injuries sustained by two others, in three separate incidents on the construction project.

"These were all serious incidents and resulted in the death of one of their workers.

"We have concluded following thorough investigations that there is sufficient evidence to prosecute and it is in the public interest to do so."

BAM Nuttall of Camberley, Surrey, Ferrovia Agroman, of West London, and Keir, of Sandy, Bedfordshire, face four charges, each, two relating to the death of Mr Tkačik and one each relating to injuries to Mr Hughes and Mr Viziutu.

The three firms are due to appear before Westminster Magistrates' Court next month.

Most of capital's young drivers are rubbish without sat-nav - survey

MOST of London's young drivers are rubbish without their sat-nav, a new survey has revealed - and almost half of them would call off their trip if it broke.

The survey, by car-leasing company Cars On Demand, revealed that the majority of millennials - aged 18 to 34 - struggle to read an A to Z.

"One direction? It's more like wrong direction - 67 per cent admit they struggle to read a map and 44 per cent would abandon a journey if their sat-nav broke down," said a spokesman for Cars On Demand. "We discovered that more than half of us, 54 per cent, would struggle to read a road map these days.

"However, if we look more closely, 67 per cent of those were aged between 18 and 44, and 43 per cent of them could be described as millennials.

"Only 16.5 per cent were 55 or over, demonstrating perhaps that we are slowly but surely losing the skills of finding our way by good old fashioned map-reading."

The survey also revealed that 91 per cent of people aged 18 to 24 do not even keep a map in their car, whereas there's an A to Z in the glove compartments of cars driven by 66 per of drivers aged more than 45.

"Maybe it's because they've gathered so much wisdom over the years - including the fact that when a phone battery dies, if you don't have anything else to fall back on, you're pretty much stuck," said the spokesman.

"Overall, however, people feel safer using GPS than a printed map, with 85 per cent of us agreeing with that.

"But on the other hand, perhaps we're also losing a bit of common sense as the survey showed that more than a third of us would take an illegal turn, or drive down a bus lane, if our sat-nav told us to."

Musical tackles tricky subject of suicide

Suicide is the single biggest killer of men under the age of 45. Yet research reveals that men often have real difficulty opening up and talking about their problems. As part of the London Weekly News and South London Press Change Is Possible appeal, reporter Jack Dixon meets the team behind a new West End musical that aims to put suicide in the spotlight

FIVE friends gather on the evening before a funeral. Dean, someone they thought they knew so well, has taken his own life.

As the plot slowly unravels, each must examine their own lives, their own relationships, as they struggle to come to terms with the sudden and unexpected loss.

This is the framework for a new musical, Catch Me, which opened in the West End last month.

But it is also a familiar story faced every day by the thousands of people whose lives have been affected by suicide.

It remains the single biggest killer of men under the age of 45 in the UK – claiming more lives than car crashes, alcohol abuse, and even cancer.

According to male suicide charity CALM, the Campaign Against Living Miserably, more than 4,500 men kill themselves every year in Britain.

Suicide is a particular problem among the male population, research suggests, with men three times more likely than women to take their own lives.

Yet, despite all the warning signs, men still find it difficult to open up about their feelings and seek help for mental health problems.

A CALM study published in November revealed that less than half of men who said they had felt depressed reached out to others for help, while more than two thirds of women did.

Arnoud Breitbarth and Chris Czornyj, the writers behind Catch Me, believe we must all learn to talk about our emotions.

"The central message of the show is 'do not be afraid to open up and ask for help if you need it'," says Arnoud.

"All the characters are struggling with actually being able to tell their friends or other halves what they really want. Most of them fit a specific type and they cannot really break out of these locks."

Chris adds: "It's a taboo subject, it's painful to talk about it let alone sing about it. But that's what we did, we put it in a musical – and Catch Me is the result."

The show tells Dean's story, in two halves, as his five friends wrestle with the consequences of his sudden death.

Reuben Beau Davies plays Dean, whose struggle is gradually revealed during the show's second act.

"At first you think, 'how do I get into the head of someone who has committed suicide?' But actually this play is not about that at all," he says. "Dean is just an ordinary guy. It's looking at suicide from the angle that it could happen to anyone."

Reuben has brought his own personal experience of mental health problems to the role. He was only 12 years old when a close friend took his own life.

"It was very weird, having that experience so young. It made me very wary," he adds. "Three of my friends suffer with depression and have been prescribed medication for it, but I'm not sure that's really the answer. It's like you plug them in for a short time and then you take the plug out and they are gone again. I meditate every morning because I believe you should look after your brain in the same way that you look after your body."

It was a similarly emotive experience for Kathryn Pemberton, who plays Dean's fiancée in the show.

"I've never experienced anything like this but reading through it I've drawn so many parallels with my own relationship, it's made me look at my own life."

Both Arnoud and Chris were inspired by experiences of suicide in their own friendship circles.

But they wanted to tackle the subject on stage without being preachy or judgemental.

Carefully-timed moments of comedy coupled with a rousing soundtrack help to give the show an uplifting finale, despite the seriousness of the subject matter, says director Jill Patterson.

"It's about a mindset, how Dean feels trapped and the other characters end up feeling trapped too," she explains. "That inertia, that inability to see light at the end of the tunnel. We explored that a lot in movement and how the characters interact with each other on the stage."

It takes bravery to tackle a subject like suicide through the medium of musical theatre, says Jill. But this is also a story about human relationships and how we get along with friends.

"What I really love about the piece is that most of what you take away is what is not said, rather than what is said," she adds. "I believe theatre should be something that has a relationship with what people are experiencing in everyday life. That's what 'the arts' needs to be. It's a great way to tackle a really serious issue that has a big impact on society."

Inspector says no to window removal appeal

A PROPERTY owner who fitted uPVC windows to a property in Warwick Close, off Kensington High Street, has lost an appeal against a planning enforcement notice to remove them.

The independent Planning Inspectorate made its ruling after hearing that planners from the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea had issued the enforcement notice in May after discovering that uPVC windows had been fitted to the property at 2 Warwick Close, W8 without planning permission.

The owner had said the windows were fitted to help reduce noise from traffic on Kensington High Street and had cited a building elsewhere in the borough where the council had permitted the fitting of uPVC windows to help reduce traffic noise.

However, the Inspector noted the council's decision that the windows fitted at this property were in keeping with its character, which was not the case at 2 Warwick Close.

In the Planning Inspector's written decision it stated that the installation of the uPVC windows had "unacceptably harmed the character and appearance of the host building", the residential block of which it forms a part and the surrounding area, and views from within both the Edwards Square/Scarsdale & Abingdon Conservation Area and the Holland Park Conservation Area.

Following the Inspector's decision, the owner of the property has two months to replace the windows to match those that existed previously.

CLR Timothy Coleridge, Cabinet Member for Planning Policy, said: "I am pleased that the Planning Inspector has upheld the enforcement notice we served earlier this year."

"It was our belief that the windows were out of character and would not have received planning permission, had it been applied for. Borough residents who are thinking of making alterations, including changes to the materials of their windows are encouraged to seek guidance through the council's planning advice service."

Palace man: case dropped

A CHINESE student accused of carrying a folded knife in Buckingham Palace claiming to be "on a mission to kill the Queen" has had his case discontinued, a court heard this week.

Hang Zhang, 25, was arrested after a "violent" struggle with police, having made it through the gate of the Royal residence on the afternoon of August 12.

When officers searched him they found the small blade in his shoe. The University of Sheffield student had previously pleaded not guilty to a charge of possessing an offensive weapon in a public place.

A charge of making a threat to kill was later dropped by the Crown Prosecution Service.

Westminster's Chief Magistrate Emmad Arbuthnot said: "The case against Zhang has been discontinued."

Her Majesty is not believed to have been at the Palace at the time of the incident, which was one of several security alerts sparked by intruders this year.

Convicted killer Denis Hennessy, 41, was arrested in the Palace grounds in May and jailed for four months at Westminster Magistrates Court.

Carols are a sound move for children's charity

HUNDREDS of guests filled the pews of St Paul's Church, Knightsbridge, for a celebrity-supported carol concert which aimed to raise £30,000 for Rainbow Trust Children's Charity.

ITV presenter and Rainbow Trust Patron Mary Nightingale hosted the event, which supports families caring for a child with a life-threatening or terminal illness.

Other guests and speakers included Polly Walker of Patriot Games and fellow Rainbow Trust Patron, Annabel Croft, Prime Suspect star Colin Salmon and Rupert Young, BBC's Merlin.

Guests enjoyed mulled wine and mince pies and heard a range of festive readings, including one read by a young sister from one of the families supported by Rainbow Trust.

Farleigh School Chapel Choir, from Andover, sang arrangements of classical Christmas songs and led the congregational singing of traditional Christmas carols. Trailblazers, an award winning barbershop quartet from London, also performed festive songs.

Emma Haines, Rainbow Trust's Director of Marketing and Fundraising, says: "Rainbow Trust's annual carol concert is one of our most admired and popular events and this year was no exception."

"Our heartfelt thanks go out to everyone for supporting this event. Christmas can often be one of the hardest times of the year for the families we support."

"Everybody really got into the festive spirit at the concert while fundraising for a fantastic cause, meaning that our family support workers can help those families have the best Christmas possible."

Have your say on future of London's fire service

BY GEOFF BAKER
geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

SADIQ Khan is urging Londoners to have their say on how the capital's fire and rescue service deals with threats of terrorism and with flooding over the next four years.

The draft London Safety Plan (LSP), published for public consultation today, includes proposals to expand the London Fire Brigade's capacity to respond to a terrorist incident.

"Last year's Paris attacks brought the emergency services' capability to respond to a marauding terrorist firearms attack (MTFA) into sharp focus."

"Delivering two manifesto commitments, the Mayor commissioned an independent review into London's terror preparedness, led by Lord Toby Harris, and a review of London Fire Brigade's resources led by Anthony Mayer," said the Mayor's spokesman.

"The draft plan echoes the recommendations of Lord Harris, setting out intentions to boost the number of specialist firefighters trained to move in behind the police to fight fires and help treat casualties in a terrorist incident."

"It also proposes an extensive evaluation of the role of Fire Rescue Units (FRUs) and the potential to give them attendance time targets, after Anthony Mayer's review highlighted the importance of these specialist vehicles in responding to major incidents."

Londoners are also invited to give their views on whether capability to respond to flooding should be expanded.

Sadiq Khan, said: "Keeping Londoners safe is my first priority, and as the capital faces new challenges and threats, we need to make sure our fire brigade is prepared and ready to respond to whatever may be around the corner."

"This new plan sets out a series of proposals for the coming years and I encourage all Londoners to have their say in the consultation, and help make sure we are doing everything we can to keep our capital city protected."

London Fire Commissioner Ron Dobson said: "This year has been a monumental one as we've celebrated 150 years of the service firefighters have given to London. Modern firefighters face a range of challenges from road traffic collisions, to flooding and chemical spillages."

"We also need to plan for the very worst. Even though we hope it never happens, we must prepare our firefighters to be part of the response to a terrorist incident. This consultation is a chance for Londoners to have their say on a range of work we are doing to keep Londoners safe for the next four years and how we deal with changing threats."

Other proposals in the plan include:

■ In a bid to help drive further performance improvements, the brigade plans to dispatch a fire engine within 10 minutes to any incident anywhere in London 90 per cent of the time. This is an improvement on the current standard of 12 minutes on 95 per cent of occasions.

■ Work to improve diversity and community relations within the brigade. Fire chiefs want to throw open the 'big red doors' of their fire stations, allowing the community to engage more with firefighters and freeing up facilities for community use. As well as placing stations at the heart of the community, fire chiefs want to make sure their staff experience an inclusive culture in the workplace.

The consultation is on the Talk London website and will run for eight weeks.

There will be seven drop-in events across London and four online meetings for Londoners to learn more about the brigade and ask questions.

Major Peake's spacecraft to be a museum star

THE Soyuz spacecraft used by Tim Peake in his Principia mission is to go on display at the Science Museum in Kensington.

Science Museum Director Ian Blatchford signed the landmark acquisition document for Soyuz TMA-19M in the presence of RSC Energia, the craft's manufacturer, and ROSCOSMOS, the Russian Space Agency, marking the 50th anniversary of the first ever unmanned Soyuz flight.

"The spacecraft used by the UK's first ESA astronaut in his historic mission to the International Space Station (ISS) is set to inspire future generations of space scientists as it becomes the first flown human spacecraft acquired by the Science Museum Group for the UK's national space technology collection," said a spokesman.

Ian Blatchford said: "Russian ingenuity led to the birth of the space age and today it still plays a critical role, notably in long duration missions to pave the way for the next great leap into the cosmos."

"It is a great honour to be here to officially acquire the first flown human spacecraft in the Science Museum Group collection, one which allowed Tim Peake to make his historic journey to the International Space Station which we plan to share with the public to help inspire future generations."

The museum spokesman added: "The display of this historic object, which carried Peake and his crewmates Yuri Malenchenko and Tim Kopra in Expedition 46/47 to and from the ISS, will build on the success of the Science Museum's recent Cosmonauts: Birth of the Space Age exhibition which was visited by 140,000 people in Britain, becoming the Museum's most successful exhibition ever."

Vladimir Soltnev, General Director of RSC Energia, commented: "We are very honoured that a flown descent vehicle produced by our corporation will take its rightful place in the collection of one of the most important science and technology museum groups in the world. I would like to hope that this special symbol of Russia will become one of the highlights of the Science Museum Group collection, attracting many new visitors."

Further details about the display of the Soyuz TMA-19M will be released in due course.

Astronaut Tim Peake's spacecraft will feature at the Science Museum in Kensington

Challenging times on the horizon at Buckingham and Kensington

ON the face of it, the Press offices at Buckingham and Kensington palaces face a bit of a challenging time next year, not from the usual tussle with the troublesome paparazzi but to keep the Royal Family in the headlines to the joyous level that they have recently become accustomed.

Like all institutions, the Royal Family are somewhat dependent upon publicity. As, like so many other pillars of the establishment, they are publicly funded, good PR helps maintain the feeling of their entitlement to the cash as very few mind financially supporting the royals when the bunting is flickering and the flags are flying along The Mall and around the city. But to set the flags a'flying, PRs need events to which to tag the celebrations.

In recent years the Royal Family has been fortunate in the number of milestones and occasions to which the flag-waving could be effortlessly pinned.

There's been the marriage of the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the births of George and Charlotte, the Queen's diamond jubilee, Her Majesty's record-breaking longest reign, the poignancy of the 100th anniversary of the First World War, the 70th anniversary of the end of the Second World War and, of course, this year all of the many events that went on around the Queen's 90th birthday.

The aggregate of all of this has been that whereas the Royal Family were once an institution like the Church, always there but not always essential to popular culture, now they have become showbiz, supported by such a surge of popularity that they are now the new pop stars, with every newspaper, magazine and news site wanting to tell an avid audience everything about them.

Much of this new demand for the royals is due to the high profile of William, Kate and Harry, who have propelled the institution almost to the level of The Beatles. They have become The Threathats and public demand for their every appearance and utterance at times approaches a mania.

But, to continue the analogy, at first glance 2017 looks set to be a non-album year, with fewer events and reasons to get the bunting out than we have seen in recent years.

The big royal celebratory event of the coming year will be the 70th wedding anniversary of the Queen and Prince Philip.

Netflix's blockbuster series The Crown has already anticipated the vicarious interest in this, which is why the television company has spent £100 million on the saga. And many, many Press articles and television programmes will yet be created to join the celebration and commentary on a remarkable achievement.

But the wedding anniversary does not

Next year marks the 70th wedding anniversary of the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh occur until November 20 and even though the royal Press offices are likely to release never-before-seen photos of the occasion or organise the like of an exhibition at Buckingham Palace of the life and times of Elizabeth and Philip, and doubtless both the BBC and ITV will be planning documentaries featuring expert commentary on the success of the marriage, there is not a great deal that spin doctors can do to spin it out.

Unlike other great stars of our times, the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh cannot go on The Graham Norton Show or do an exclusive cover story for You magazine to perpetuate their constant presence in the public eye. They need a good event, most usually an anniversary, around which to be seen to be in the heart and mind of the public.

But next year those events look to be a bit thin on the ground.

Yes, there's a much-rumoured royal tour of Canada pencilled in the schedule. But that occasion, to mark Canada's 150th birthday, does not fall until July. And even if a royal tour does happen, it's Canada – and Canada is rather off-Broadway as far as it affects us.

Both The Prince's Trust and The Duke of Edinburgh's Award can't help much, as their big anniversaries were this year. So what else could be turned into a right royal occasion?

There's Prince Harry's Invictus Games, an excellent and admirable sports festival starring more than 500 ill, injured and wounded servicemen and women from 17 countries. But that's not until September and it's in Canada and therefore is unlikely to get the crowds out in their tens of thousands in The Mall.

Of course, next year both Harry and William are likely to continue their earnest and genuine campaigns for the plights of elephants, rhinos and other endangered wildlife and that should help maintain some media presence. But, commendable and necessary as saving the animals is, it can risk getting a bit tedious to hear the same message year after year after year because, like it or not, the modern consumer of media nowadays expects the sensational to grab his attention.

Similarly, although Prince Harry's heartfelt campaign with the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge for greater awareness and understanding of mental health is one that too is commendable, as with the threatened extinction of wild animals, if the same message – no matter how crucial and important it is – is just recited over and over, the old phrase "change the record" could soon come to some media minds.

However, a good opportunity for some Threathatmania will present itself in April when the young royals' mental-health charity Heads Together is the official charity of the year at the Virgin Money London Marathon – although the potential media explosion that this good cause generates could be rather dependent upon either William, Harry or Catherine running in it.

But while the sight of the peerlessly glamorous Duchess of Cambridge in running shorts is a photograph that would wing itself around the world on to every website, television news bulletin and front page and would truly put the Heads Together message firmly in the mind of billions, such a PR stunt is fraught with potential dangers.

Aside from the obvious security concerns – which would be so massive that those charged with maintaining the safety of the royals would most likely veto the very suggestion – there is also the evident problem of maintaining the royal image: even if Harry or William or Kate was to train for the marathon, it's a long, hard run and would we really want to see red-faced and puffed-out pictures of any of our first family crossing the finish line on the point of collapse?

This is why not many top rock stars run the marathon – the risk is that the pictures are may not be pretty and, if you're a superstar, it's the look that matters; image is all – and at this level, wheezing for breath is not a great image.

And besides, dignity is another factor to be maintained when one is a royal. It is all very well if, as has been reported, Kensington Palace PRs favour heavily promoting their charges on social media in preference to traditional news media – but too much playing to trendiness can be fraught with slip-ups.

Twitter and Facebook have their importance but nobody wants to see Harry, William and Kate becoming the British equivalent of the Kardashians. We saw the like of that once before when some bright spark advised the then-young royals that it would be a fabulous idea, which it wasn't, for them to compete in It's A Knockout, the associated embarrassment of which would have set the monarchy back a thousand years had not Her Majesty's various jubilees occurred to resuscitate it.

But despite a lack of significant anniversaries, the royals will still feature in the news of 2017 as other events not of their stewardship involve them.

For instance, with the planet warming up

The Queen's bespoke Christmas crackers – an apology

IN the Royal London section of last week's newspaper, we stated that Her Majesty's bespoke Christmas crackers are made by Celebration Crackers of Dorset.

We have been informed by Philippa Dutton, former assistant secretary of the Royal Warrant Holders Association, that this was incorrect. She said: "Tom Smith Group are still the supplier of crackers to the Royal Family."

"They have been in existence since 1847 and they supply an annual personal service."

"They are part of the International Greetings company in Wales."

"The Queen opened their new premises in Wales in 2014.

"Their first Royal Warrant was granted by the then-Prince of Wales in 1906 and they have held a Royal Warrant to the Queen since 1964 as suppliers of Christmas crackers and wrapping paper."

We apologise for the error.

and running out like never before and with every month that passes being heralded as the hottest in history, the warnings of the Prince of Wales, ignored for so long, will now become part of the public focus.

Although Charles's own big year will be 2018, when he hits 70, next year could easily become the year when the world finally heeds his thoughts on sustainability and biodiversity.

And with the planet plunging hellbent into the abyss that he has repeatedly warned of, some believe that 2017 could even see the prince not just heeded but conscripted as an adviser to government policy on ecology. A royal advising the cabinet would doubtless prompt all manner of talk of constitutional crisis. But perhaps protocol may be set aside when the prince's penny drops and there is the realisation that no "crisis" is more critical than the future of the Earth.

Of course nothing gets the bunting out better nor stokes royal fervour more than a royal wedding. If the royals now be rock stars, what better event could be held to fan the fandom than a marriage with all of the pomp and pageantry of the way the royals do it? We wonder who may be in the frame for such a PR dream?

Two points on that. One, the world's most obvious candidate is not even engaged to Meghan Markle yet; give the poor chap a chance of at least some sort of a courtship before he is flung at the altar in order to sate our hunger for a great big bash.

And two, it is unlikely that Prince Harry would choose 2017 to be the year in which he marries Ms Markle or anyone else because thoughts of another great royal will dominate next year and they will not be the happiest of ones.

For the biggest royal event of next year will be an anniversary that could understandably drive some of the Royal Family to retreat for a little while from spending so much time in the public eye, as it is the 20th anniversary of the death of Diana, Princess of Wales.

If anyone was single-handedly responsible for the new popularity of the Royal Family, if anyone put them on a par with The Beatles, it was Diana.

Indeed it was Diana who pioneered the image and the way of the New Monarchy; through her committed attention to her causes she reinvented and modernised the institution, broadening its involvement and appeal by giving her time and, moreover, her care.

2017 marks the 20th anniversary of the death of Diana, Princess of Wales

Looking back, it is quite staggering to realise the breadth of her involvement with so many of the disadvantaged and needy.

She changed the nation's attitude and awareness of HIV and AIDS, she campaigned for victims of leprosy, worked for animal protection and fought against the use of landmines. She was the patroness of charities and organisations working with the homeless, youth, drug addicts and the elderly. She was president of Great Ormond Street Hospital for Children, she was a patron of Headway, a brain-injury association, she was patron of Natural History Museum and president of Royal Academy of Music.

She was president of Barnado's, patron of the British Red Cross and her other patronages included Help the Aged, the Trust for Sick Children in Wales, the National Hospital for Neurology and Neurosurgery, the British Lung Foundation, Eureka!, the National Children's Orchestra, Royal Brompton Hospital, British Red Cross Youth, Relate Marriage Counsellors, Guinness Trust, Meningitis Trust, Dove House, the Malcolm Sargent Cancer Fund for Children, the Royal School for the Blind, Welsh National Opera, the Pre-School Playgroups Association, the Variety Club of New Zealand, Birthright, the British Deaf Association, English National Ballet, Great Ormond Street Hospital and the Royal Marsden Hospital. It is amazing what Diana did.

So perhaps it is more than convenient that 2017 will provide less royal pomp and occasion as, if it becomes Diana's year, it will provide the platform for what she may have wanted most – that her work would be carried on by her children.

Much of that work is already being continued and promoted by Harry, William and Kate through their commitment to helping the cause of the homeless and those suffering from mental ill health.

With the memory of Diana and her commitment to those causes flagged up by the 20th anniversary of her death, 2017 could become a landmark royal year for that which is better than the bunting – doing good. And that needs no great PR effort at all.

Lord of the Ants, Adam is back on the road to tour his classic album Kings Of The Wild Frontier. Featuring the breakthrough single Dog Eat Dog and iconic hit Anthemic, the show is set to transport fans back in time to the Ants' early 1980s heyday. This show at the Roundhouse is an added extra to the sell-out tour which travelled round the UK this year.

WHEN you've been touted as your hometown heroes, played at some of the world's most iconic venues, toured with the era's biggest bands and enjoyed chart success with a string of hits to rival any of indie rock's top names, reinvention can be a hard trick to master.

Riding high on the appeal of their sunny singles Pass It On, In The Morning and Dreaming Of You, The Coral were among the most sought-after acts of the early 2000s guitar-group revival.

Alongside the likes of Franz Ferdinand, Arctic Monkeys and Bloc Party, the Merseyside troupe had the ear of a generation.

Fast forward 15 years and the musical landscape is entirely different. The old-fashioned six-string axe has been largely driven from the mainstream, replaced by clean and crisp electronic beats concocted in the modern-day musical production lab.

But factory-line fever never caught on with The Coral, and they slipped quietly off the radar before lead guitarist Bill Ryder-Jones walked away from the band in 2008.

It might have been the end of the road for other groups. But The Coral continued, breaking new ground and remodelling their sound.

Reinvention has come around slowly. But on their latest album, Distance Inbetween, it seems the band have finally found comfort in their new shoes.

Older, wiser and without the internal jostling for position that characterised their more turbulent early days, it has been a smoother process all round.

"It was kind of easier for this album," singer James Skelly explained in a recent interview with M magazine.

"There were no politics, no-one in the group having a bad one. In a way, it was the most functioning band since the first album.

"With all the others there was turmoil – but in a way, you get some of your best music from that."

Some of their best, it undoubtedly was. The band's self-titled debut and its follow-up Magic And Medicine yielded a handful of their finest singles to date.

But in 2016 – the year of such seismic change around the world – The Coral are reborn.

Farewell the jingle-jangle sound of the early Noughties era, replaced by harsher, more driving rhythms influenced by the German Krautrock bands of the 1960s.

Peppered with hypnotic vocals, buzzsaw guitars and swirling synths, Distance Inbetween mines the darkest corners of psychedelia more in the mould of Aussie rockers Tame Impala than the sunshine pop of The Thrills.

"We wanted it to be more minimal and direct," says Skelly. "There aren't many chords. I think there are only about five on the whole album.

"It took a while to get the tunes together but we had them down in two to three takes. Once we'd done that, it took a bit longer to work out the sound.

"If you've got to be groove-based but you don't have an interesting drum sound, then it's not going to really stand up. We had to have this interesting rhythmical sound."

Despite this musical rebirth of sorts, The Coral remain attached to their roots in the Wirral.

Hometown heroes beloved by locals, they were inspired by the rich musical heritage of the west, torn between Liverpool to the north and Wales to the south.

"We took from Shack, Echo And The Bunnymen and The La's, then the Super Furry Animals and Gorky's from the other side – we had the eccentricity of them all and put it in the pot," Skelly tells M.

"From The Beatles and Liverpool to the Welsh thing, they're all outsiders.

"We could see both places from where we lived and it was a real meshing together of those things as a band."

For diehard fans, change can be bittersweet. But like or loathe The Coral's new-found sound, they remain among the truest bands in town.

The Coral perform at the O2 Shepherd's Bush Empire on Friday December 16. The new album Distance Inbetween is out now.

THE enduring appeal of vintage electro-pop proves that we still want The Human League after all.

Almost 35 years to the day since the release of their biggest-selling single, Don't You Want Me, the Sheffield band are still one of the genre's biggest draws.

And not just in the Northern heartlands where they first started playing together – all over Europe, too.

Stockholm, Oslo, Copenhagen, Cologne, Antwerp, Amsterdam, Berlin and Hamburg are all stops on the band's A Very British Synthesizer Group winter tour, which arrives at the Royal Festival Hall tonight.

Now comprising just three members – vocalist and songwriter Philip Oakey, joined by Joanne Catherall and Susan Ann Sulley – the League are hitting the road once again.

Having influenced modern artists as varied as Moby, Hot Chip and Little Boots, the band's continued appeal proves that our appetite for infectious synth-pop has never gone away.

Fans can expect an airing of vintage hits Love Action, Open Your Heart and Mirror Man during this evening's show at the Royal Festival Hall, which follows an emotional homecoming date at the Steel Hall in Sheffield.

"They're a group who have sold millions of records, inspired two generations of artists, written some of the all-time great classic pop songs, had number ones across Europe and the US and yet still remain fiercely independent," proclaims the band's official website.

The Human League may have been a band at home in the 1980s – but they are alive and kicking as strongly as ever today.

The Human League will perform at the Royal Festival Hall tonight. The anthology collection, A Very British Synthesizer Group, is out now.

80s TV classic returns

IT'S time to dig out your leg warmers and ra-ra skirts and grab your Walkmans as BBC Four revives the classic 1980s programme Pop Quiz.

Pop Quiz: The Comeback will comprise two specials celebrating 1980s pop music.

Hosted by the original presenter Mike Read, these two new programmes will pit two teams made up of legendary 1980s pop stars against each other in a retro treat.

The guests include Toyah Willcox, Nick Heyward (Haircut 100), Carol Decker (T'Pau), Tom Bailey (Thompson Twins), Andy McCluskey (OMD), Steve Norman (Spandau Ballet), David Grant (Linx), Cheryl Baker, Jay Aston (both Bucks Fizz), Ranking Roger

(The Beat), Mari Wilson and Leelee John (Imagination).

Read says: "I'm delighted to be working with a great BBC team to bring back the classic television series Pop Quiz."

"Once again the brows of the famous will be furrowed, lips pursed and eyes narrowed as we test their music knowledge, watch some great classic footage and have some fun along the way."

The quiz originally broadcast from July 1981 to January 1984.

Cassian Harrison, channel editor, BBC Four, says: "BBC Four is the home of popular music on BBC television and it's fabulous to bring back one of our greatest and most popular music quiz shows for a very special Christmas treat."

GREAT bands can carve out a successful career without saying a single word. The posturing, the exhibitionism and the shock factor can sustain an artist's appeal for decades, if that's what it takes.

But for Bobby Gillespie, the iconic front-man of Scottish rockers Primal Scream, the musician's real craft is in the art of communication.

"Everything in society is now fractured and precarious," he told NME in a recent interview.

"Your job, my job, us as individuals. We're supposedly connected through the internet but we're not. We're more isolated than ever."

Too many singers over-complicate their art – says Gillespie – wrapping clever messages up inside lyrics in a bid to beguile their audience.

But the process only cloaks their communicative paralysis. The trick is to express a common sentiment in simple, relatable language.

Primal Scream, fortunately, have the knack.

Despite an ever-changing line-up and a recording career spanning close to 30 years – 2017 will mark three decades since their debut album Sonic Flower Groove – the band have always been able to cut through.

Their music is built from the ground up, for the lowest common denominator. Simply put, it's primal.

That's not to say the Glasgow group are stuck in stasis. On the contrary, they continue to surprise, experimenting with new styles and forming unexpected creative collaborations.

On their latest album, for instance, special guests Sky Ferreira, HAIM and Rachel Zefira populate tracks with an electro-pop edge.

For Gillespie, in the face of our broken world, music can still be an inspirational force.

"I still get so excited about music, super-thrilled by hearing other artists who are doing good stuff," he told Consequence Of Sound recently.

"New stuff that's inventive and full of imagination and energy.

"When (guitarist) Andrew Innes and myself make some music that we both think is really good, it always surprises us. Not surprised but I'm happy that we're still pushing."

Gillespie is one of British rock's great innovators, looking at the medium through the eyes of an artist rather than a composer.

"I see music as art. When someone can express themselves really well – musically well – then I'm always very touched by that.

"I think it's an incredible thing to be able to express yourself that way."

Primal Scream are still best remembered as the acid house pioneers of the early 90s.

With their legendary album Screamadelica, they inadvertently soundtracked an entire era, combining pounding guitar rhythms with the roof-raising sounds of gospel.

Famous tracks like Movin' On Up put Gillespie's point into practice, with the effortlessly memorable lines: "I was blind, now I can see/You made a believer out of me."

A quarter of a century later and the band are still making a huge contribution to our musical landscape.

Gillespie says finally kicking his drug habit eight years ago has enabled him to widen his frame of reference, to read more and take care in his craft.

And Chaosmosis, the band's latest album, confronts the struggle for clarity and beauty in a world where the structures are constantly shifting.

"It seemed to me like the term was a very weird description of the creative process where you absorb everything if you're an artistic person," he explains.

"You absorb all the information, the data overload of the modern world and it's kind of hard to decode and decipher it.

"Instead of letting that stuff drag you down and make you depressed, you can turn it into an artwork. You can take that negativity and turn it into something spiritual for other people to be inspired by it. Put some light back into a dark world."

Primal Scream will perform at the O2 Academy in Brixton on Thursday. The new album Chaosmosis is out now.

New plea for help in bid to make Tin Pan Alley film

CROWDFUNDING for the film of the history of Tin Pan Alley has now reached two-thirds of its target – but movie-makers have renewed their appeal as time is running out.

The team planning Tin Pan Alley Tales, the story of Denmark Street's legend as the music centre of London, have now raised £14,000 towards their £21,000 target.

But they have to reach the goal figure by December 21 or, under crowdfunding rules, all the pledges could be lost.

"The support to date has been wonderful and we're very grateful but we need a little more help from our friends," said the movie's producer-director Henry Scott-Irvine. "But I'm confident we'll reach our target by the deadline as more money is coming in all the time. We just need that last-minute extra push."

Tin Pan Alley during the 1960s

Funding for the planned documentary was boosted by another £900 last week through an eBay auction of rare records.

An acetate of The Best Of Madness sold for £665, £155 was paid for a white label of the Madness album Mad Not Mad and a collector paid £75 for a white label of the David Bowie hit Absolute Beginners. The records were donated by Madness producer Clive Langer. Another "undisclosed but significant" donation to the film fund has been pledged by the Flat Iron steak house, which is on the site of the legendary music industry hang-out the Gioconda Cafe at 9 Denmark Street.

"In the early 1960s, Engelbert Humperdinck – then known as Jerry Dorsey – used to eat breakfast there in the hope that he could hire a pick-up band of jobbing musicians to hire for a UK tour," said Mr Scott-Irvine.

"By the mid 1960s Davie Jones, who was later to change his name to David Bowie, used to meet his Mod mate Marc Feld, later to become Marc Bolan, at the Gioconda to plan their dreams of fame and fortune.

"The Small Faces also signed to Andrew Loog Oldham's Immediate Records in the Gioconda and upstairs above the cafe was Central Sound Studios where the Bee Gees recorded their debut album. All of these stories will be in the film and we're grateful to Flat Iron for helping fund it."

Pledges for Tin Pan Alley Tales can be made on the crowdfunding site phundee.com.

ROBBIE Williams has won the crown that all rock stars wanted – he will star in the BBC's now-traditional New Year's Eve spectacular.

The end-of-the-year gig has become one of the most coveted in the rock calendar as previous broadcasts – Bryan Adams in 2015 and Queen and Adam Lambert in 2014 – have been the most-watched television music performances of the year, and therefore great for record sales.

Williams will be performing live at Central Hall Westminster, in Robbie Rocks Big Ben Live on New Year's Eve, in the build-up to the clock striking midnight to see in 2017 and continuing again after the fireworks, on BBC One. Tickets for the gig sold out in minutes.

"Robbie will delight fans with an exclusive show including tracks from his current album The Heavy Entertainment Show as well as some of his greatest hits," said a BBC spokesman.

Williams said: "I can't wait to party with London and the rest of the UK on New Year's Eve."

AN ALTERNATIVE VIEW

by Cllr Robert Atkinson, Labour Group leader, RBKC

WE are lucky to live at a time when not only is life expectancy continuing to increase in leaps and bounds but, contrary to rumour, most people now live longer in both good health and in growing prosperity.

Pensioners no longer constitute the most deprived section of the population. We should therefore give thanks for both antibiotics and for our beloved NHS – arguably the greatest boons of the 20th century.

As more and more of us live for 30-plus years after retirement it has become an increasingly urgent question as to how to pay for maintaining the retired in the security and comfort that most now take for granted.

There can be no argument in principle that people be asked to work longer before retirement – and as women still live longer than men there was no argument that the retirement age be equalised between the sexes. But there is great argument as to how equalisation of the state pension age has been achieved. And one section of society, women born in the mid 1950s, has every right to complain about being unfairly treated.

These women began their working life (the majority leaving school at 15) expecting that they would retire at 60. When it was then agreed that the retirement age be equalised, it was assumed that equalisation would be achieved by lowering the male age of retirement.

It came as something of a shock when retirement was equalised upwards to 65 for all. Women already in the workforce for decades were then promised a gradual scaling up of the retirement age over time but progressively and stealthily the timetable has been speeded up.

A woman born in 1955 has seen her projected state pension age increase from 60 to 65 and then 66. This has led to the formation of campaigning organisation WASPI – Women Against State Pensions Inequalities – and battle rages. A petition calling for fair transitional arrangements for all women born on or after April 6 1951 attracted more than 193,000 signatures.

During the passage of the 2011 Pension Act, the opposition expressed concern that as a result of the coalition government's changes "500,000 women will have to wait more than a year to receive their state pension, and of those, 300,000 will have to wait 18 months or more. 33,000 women unlucky enough to have been born between March 6 1954 and April 5 1954 will have to wait exactly two years before they receive their state pension". In the closing stages of this Bill it was amended so that the SPA maximum increase would be capped at 18 months relative to the timetable on the 1995 Pensions Act.

In March, the Work and Pensions Select Committee published a report on the SPA, inviting the government to make up for its mishandled changes to the state pension age. There are a range of options ministers could be pursuing, including the option of early access to a lower state pension.

Despite earlier blandishments the current government has now refused further concessions to the now relatively small group of women left without a fair transition. This is not just a question of principle but many of this group are now experiencing hardship because their pension arrangements changed so rapidly that they have had no opportunity to change their savings arrangements nor to seek additional or better paying work to allow them to bridge the gap that has been created for them.

Our pensions system should ensure dignity in retirement, and properly reflect the contribution that older people have made, and continue to make, to our society. We have not heard the last of WASPI.

Girl shocks commuters by crossing Tube lines

LONDON Underground safety chiefs are to deliver a stern talking-to at the school of the child who shocked commuters at Latimer Road station as she dived with death by crossing the lines.

After talks with British Transport Police, Tube chiefs are to give the schoolgirl and fellow pupils a blunt explanation of the dangers of being fried by the 630-volt power lines or being hit by a train.

The incident, which was captured on his mobile by a passenger, horrified onlookers as the child obviously dashed between platforms at the North Kensington station on Thursday. Mick Cash, leader of the RMT union which released the picture, said it illustrated the problems being caused by a shortage of staff.

He said: "This is exactly what happened at Latimer Road where it took a passenger with a mobile phone to let London Underground know that a schoolchild has been wandering across electrified track while trains run."

Tube chiefs said they had immediately launched an investigation and quickly identified the girl's school. They have been in touch with the school to reveal the girl's alarming behaviour. London Underground safety officers will now be visiting the school to advise pupils of the dangers of the railway and how to behave.

Tube bosses denied union claims that the station was unstaffed at the time but they confirmed there was no staff member on the platforms.

A spokesman said: "The station was not unstaffed. There was a member of staff on the gateline. That is usual practice at Latimer Road which is a one-staff-member station and has been for some time."

£200m plan to make 100 Tube stations step-free

BY GEOFF BAKER
geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

LONDON mayor Sadiq Khan is to spend £200 million to make travelling by Tube easier for the elderly, disabled and mums with baby buggies.

Mr Khan is planning a massive investment to provide step-free access in more than 100 stations on London Underground. He has announced that he will instigate the biggest boost to step-free access on the Underground in the network's 153-year history, by investing an additional £40 million a year over the next five years.

As part of its draft Business Plan, Transport for London has committed to making more than 30 additional Tube stations step-free by 2021-22.

"The move will bring the total number of stations with step-free access to all platforms to more than 100, representing more than 40 per cent of the Underground network and significantly increasing the proportion from the current level of 26 per cent," said the mayor's spokesman.

"It will substantially improve the accessibility of the Tube, making life easier for older and disabled people. It will also give a greater choice of travel options for everyone, and will directly benefit parents and carers with children and buggies."

Major stations including Bond Street, Tottenham Court Road and Victoria will become step-free next year. Work will also progress at vital interchanges at Bank and Elephant & Castle.

"The full opening of the Elizabeth Line in 2019 will also be a huge moment for the accessibility of London's transport network, with every station being step-free. The line will provide a key new east-west link across the capital, serving step-free stations at the heart of London, with all platforms and trains accessible step-free," said the spokesman.

Mr Khan said: "As part of making London's transport system one of the best in the world we must ensure it is accessible for all Londoners. It's not right that for people with disabilities, parents with young children and many older people, many of our stations are still very difficult to use."

"I promised in my manifesto that we needed to be more ambitious with our approach to step-free access, and now I'm confirming that £200 million will be invested on the Underground over the next five years."

"As part of building a modern and affordable transport system, I'm determined to make sure all Londoners can get around London safely and easily."

The plans have been widely welcomed by disability and mothers' groups.

Ruth Owen, chief executive of Whizz-Kidz, said: "Public transport is a lifeline for disabled people but we know that accessibility can be a major barrier for wheelchair users who, like anyone else, just want to get from A to B. We warmly welcome the mayor's plans to invest in making the Underground more accessible, and his clear commitment to making the city more inclusive for the many disabled people who live and work there."

Annie O'Leary, editor-in-chief at Netmums, said: "These plans are hugely welcome, and will make such a difference to those who currently struggle to use the Tube. A more accessible network will benefit so many families and make life much easier for anyone travelling with a buggy."

Karen Lord, head of branch at John Lewis Oxford Street, said: "Improved station accessibility is key to our customers – whether that's mums with prams, disabled shoppers, the elderly, or simply those with heavy bags. We welcome the planned investment on this initiative in stations across London, complementing the upgrades at Bond Street and Tottenham Court Road, which will help transform the shopping experience for many on Oxford Street."

Janet Cooke, chief executive of London TravelWatch, said: "We are delighted to hear about these new developments – step-free access is good for everyone. We will continue to speak for all Londoners to progress the further steps needed to make the network fully accessible and work collaboratively with TfL to achieve this."

Mark Wild, London Underground's managing director, said: "Making the Underground more accessible for our customers is one of our top priorities. We should not only be aspiring to, but making a reality of, a transport network that can be used by everyone. We have made good progress but we're determined to do even more even quicker. We will invest more than ever before in improving step-free access to ensure we provide services that serve every Londoner."

TfL has the most accessible bus fleet in the world, with all 9,000 buses low-floor wheelchair accessible and fitted with ramps.

Arab women win praise from MP

VICTORIA Borwick, MP for Kensington, has hailed the positive contribution Arab women have played in today's society. The praise from Mrs Borwick came at the second annual Arab Women Awards.

The awards ceremony, held at the Jumeirah Carlton Tower Hotel, celebrated the tremendous achievements by Arab women from business, science, art, culture and education.

Mrs Borwick, who was presenting an award to HH Princess Ameerah Al Taweel for social leadership, said in her speech: "London is the most culturally diverse and stimulating city on Earth."

"This city gives you access to many cultural experiences including Arabic events and festivals which showcase the diversity of London."

"The mayor of London's Eid festival is now internationally famous for promoting global artists and cultural activities from Qatar, Dubai, Morocco, Iran, Turkey and many more."

"Additionally, the Shubbak festival of contemporary Arab culture – which will be celebrating its seventh year – also promotes talent from female Arabic artists and designers."

"The Royal Borough of Kensington & Chelsea delivers the Nour festival which is a celebration of the very best in contemporary Middle Eastern and North African arts and culture."

"These events not only celebrate the diversity of London but also reinforce a great cultural, economic and political understanding between London and the Arab world."

"The mayor of London launched his global London Is Open campaign to welcome and encourage visitors and investment to London. Whoever you are, and whatever your background, London is open to you."

"London is a second home to many and you will know that you will be made to feel welcome in a city that is safe and secure, as well as to enjoy what London has to offer."

The Slug and Lettuce on Hanover Street has undergone an extensive refurbishment

Fantastic fare on offer in luxurious surroundings

FOLLOWING an extensive refurbishment, the Slug and Lettuce on Hanover Street now boasts a plush and luxurious interior, which provides a warming and gracious atmosphere. With some excellent service, great food and all at a reasonable price, it's the perfect place to meet friends for a festive feast, writes Nicky Sweetland.

I popped in on a cold Tuesday night – and with the Christmas lights of Regent Street twinkling in the distance, I immediately noted a jovial ambiance and wonderfully Christmassy feel.

My companion and I started with a couple of cocktails – but with such an extensive range I didn't know which to try.

I went for Strawberry Daiquiri (Havana Club Three-year-old Rum, strawberry puree, fresh lime juice and sugar syrup, £9.20), while my friend sampled a porn star martini (Absolut Vanilia vodka, Passoa liqueur, caramel syrup, sugar syrup, fresh lemon juice, pineapple juice and passion fruit, with a shot of Prosecco on the side, £10.20).

Both were light and fresh and acted as a perfect accompaniment to our starters, for me kimchi steam buns (soft oriental buns filled with Korean-style pickled vegetables, baby spinach and a spiced lemon dressing, £5.29). My buddy munched on crispy calamari.

The kimchi was hot and substantial, while the calamari was crunchy and perfectly prepared.

Next I was treated to a grilled sea bass fillet served with a super food salad (£12.79), which was meaty and succulent.

My friend filled up on a deli beef burger (NYC-style classic, eight-hour slow-cooked cured British beef brisket, melting Cheddar cheese and French's classic mustard, topped with pickles and served with skinny fries, £10.99), a hearty and fulsome winter warmer.

We also managed to squeeze in dessert. My friend had a real plate full, with a decadent display of mini delicacies, while I plumped for a classic rhubarb roulade, which was a tart and tantalising pleasure.

A thoroughly enjoyable dining experience – I would highly recommend the Slug and Lettuce on Hanover Street.

MARK HIX'S RECIPE OF THE WEEK

Roast goose with clementine and chestnut salad

Serves 6

GOOSE doesn't need to be fatty, and with careful preparation you can end up with a nice, meaty, lean and moist bird. You can reuse the cooking fat from the legs for delicious roast potatoes, and the rest of the carcass, once you've removed the breasts for this recipe, is great for gravy.

Offering a salad on Christmas Day lightens up the whole feast, which can be very welcome.

1 goose weighing 3-4kg, preferably with livers and gizzards

For the herb bag:

A 25cm square piece of muslin; string

A few sprigs of thyme

A small piece of cinnamon stick

6 juniper berries, chopped

1/2tbsp coriander seeds

1/2tbsp white peppercorns

4 cloves

1 bay leaf

6 cloves of garlic, roughly chopped

400g duck or goose fat

2tsp sea salt

For the salad:

A couple handfuls of small salad leaves

4 clementines or satsumas, segmented

Up to 4 chestnuts, fresh, frozen or vacuum packed, peeled and lightly toasted

2tbsp orange juice

1tbsp sherry vinegar

4tbsp walnut oil

Salt and freshly ground black pepper

Preheat the oven to 160C/gas mark 3. First prepare your goose by removing the legs: loosen them by pulling away from the side as you cut the skin with a sharp knife, then pull them all the way out and cut through the joint. Cut the legs in half at the joint then in half again, and pack them snugly into an appropriate sized, oven-proof, thick-bottomed pan or casserole dish with a lid.

Put all the herbs and spices into the muslin and tie securely with the string, then put it in with the legs. Melt the fat and pour over to cover the legs. Add the salt then slowly bring the fat to a simmer, drop in the gizzards if you have them, then cover the pan and cook in the oven for 1.5-2 hours or until the meat is soft but not falling off the bone. If cooking in advance you can store the pieces of leg in the fat in the fridge once cool.

On the day, preheat the oven to 220C/gas mark 7. With the heel of a knife cut away the backbone so you are left with just the two breasts attached to the bones. Remove the legs from the fat and place in a roasting tray with a tablespoon or so of the fat, and cook in the oven for about 40-50 minutes, basting as they are cooking until they are crisp. Remove from the oven and keep warm but do not cover or they will go soggy.

Turn the oven down to 160C/gas mark 3. Season the breasts, heat a large frying pan and cook them on a medium heat for 4-5 minutes to render the excess fat and until they are golden brown. Transfer to a roasting tray and place in the oven for an hour, keeping them pink, then leave to rest.

Carefully remove the breasts from the goose with a sharp knife then cut them into 1/2cm slices on a slight angle, and arrange on a warmed serving platter with the legs. You can serve this, as I've done here, with your favourite gravy recipe in which, to cut through the goose's richness, you've simmered a handful of cranberries for a few minutes.

Toss all of the ingredients together for the salad, season to taste and arrange in a serving bowl or on the platter.

Talk of the town

KERRY Ellis will bring a bit of Christmas sparkle to the Hippodrome Casino next week with her award-winning solo show, writes Nicky Sweetland.

The acclaimed performer, who is known as the First Lady of the West End, will present a one-night-only intimate show at the Leicester Square venue on December 20 and has promised a fun evening of song and laughter with an added Christmas feel.

The singer played a sold-out run at the Pheasantry on the King's Road in Chelsea this year and won a West End Wilma Award in the Best Solo Performance category for her last engagement at the Hippodrome.

She said: "I'm super excited; I love doing the Hippodrome. The last time I was there was about nine months ago and I won a lovely award for it, which was great.

"I just thought it would be really nice to a one-off Christmas show. I'm going to do some of my stuff, do some Christmas songs and have a nice time."

Ellis has played some of the biggest roles in the West End and on Broadway including Elphaba in Wicked, Nancy in Oliver and Grizabella in Cats.

She has recently returned to the London stage with an all-star cast at the Arts Theatre in the rock opera Murder Ballad.

She's also a celebrated recording artist and has toured extensively with Queen guitarist Brian May, her friend and mentor, with whom she will release a new album in March.

The sought-after star has just begun a broadcasting career with the UK's first radio station dedicated to musical theatre – Encore Radio. She is hosting a show on Saturday afternoons and is relishing the new challenge.

Ellis said: "I've never done any presenting before. I've been interviewed on the radio hundreds of times and sung and I've always loved the intimacy of radio.

"It's really relaxed; there's no pressure and I like the quality of it. I've always had the dream of perhaps doing it one day.

"Encore Radio came to me with the idea of doing a musical programme on a Saturday afternoon.

"There are obviously other shows out there, with things like Elaine Paige on Radio 2, but there's a real want for it and there just isn't enough of it."

The show airs from 1pm to 3pm on Saturdays and has proved immensely popular with fans of theatre.

Ellis said: "People seem to love it and it's so lovely for me to be able to talk about people I know and experiences I've had. It just feels like I'm having a chat with people on a Saturday afternoon."

She has a busy year planned for 2017.

And quite apart from doing promotion for her new album, she is also off on tour in a new musical called Wonderland, which will run at the New Wimbledon Theatre from May 2 to 6.

Kerry Ellis

Before then, however, the singer has pledged to add some real glitz to the Hippodrome Casino in the week leading up to Christmas.

And, alongside her band, she is hoping to welcome some very exciting special guests – the identities of whom I'm not permitted to divulge – to join her onstage.

Ellis said: "I'll probably do In The Bleak Midwinter because it's on my last live album with Brian (May) and then I think we'll probably do a big megamix of Christmas favourites for everyone to sing along with.

"I want everyone to feel a bit festive. Bring your sleigh bells and your Christmas outfits."

Kerry Ellis will be performing at the Hippodrome Casino on Tuesday December 20. There is a limited number of tickets still available. For more details, visit hippodromecasino.com/events/christmas-with-kerry-ellis.

Genre-defining show's new run

SOUTHWARK Playhouse will host the European Premiere of a musical by one of the most acclaimed theatrical composers in the world, when Working by Stephen Schwartz is staged next year.

Working is the genre-defining musical from Grammy and Academy Award winner Schwartz (Wicked, Godspell) based on Studs Terkel's best-selling book of interviews with the American workforce – Working: People Talk About What They Do All Day And How They Feel About What They Do.

This highly original and universal portrait of the American workday is told from the perspective of those who the world so often overlooks – the schoolteacher, the housewife, the firefighter and the waitress among many – whose daily grind and aspirations reflect the truths of the people who make up a nation.

Working employs a range of musical styles and genres from contributing composers, including five-time Grammy winner James Taylor and Pulitzer Prize winner Lin Manuel Miranda (Hamilton, In The Heights).

Schwartz said of his new producers: "I am delighted that such a talented and distinguished theatre company will be presenting Working in London. I look forward to collaborating with them to ensure that the show is both entertaining and relevant to the contemporary British audience."

Schwartz is best known for writing and composing the Tony, Olivier and Grammy Award-winning musical Wicked. Other shows for which he wrote music and lyrics include Pippin, The Baker's Wife and Children Of Eden.

In film, he collaborated with Alan Menken on the songs for Disney's Enchanted, as well as the animated features Pocahontas and The Hunchback Of Notre Dame, and wrote the songs for the DreamWorks animated feature The Prince Of Egypt. Schwartz has won the Drama Desk Award for Outstanding Lyrics, three Grammy Awards and three Academy Awards and has been nominated for six Tony Awards.

He received the 2015 Isabelle Stevenson Award, a special Tony Award, for his commitment to serving artists and fostering new talent.

Working director Luke Sheppard directed the Olivier Award-winning production of In The Heights

(King's Cross Theatre and Southwark Playhouse), for which he was nominated for Best Director at the Whatsonstage Awards, Night Must Fall (UK tour), Stig Of The Dump (UK tour), Casa Valentina (Southwark Playhouse), The Secret Diary Of Adrian Mole Aged 13¾ (Curve, Leicester) and the forthcoming Euro premiere of Peter And The Starcatcher (Royal & Derngate, Northampton). He is the associate director of Matilda (Stratford-Upon-Avon, West End, Broadway).

Working first opened on Broadway in 1978, under the direction of Schwartz, with a cast including Patti LuPone, Bob Gunton, Joe Mantegna, David Patrick Kelly and Rex Everhart.

The show has since undergone several revisions, with additional songs by Miranda being introduced in 2009.

Working was last performed off-Broadway in December 2012, under the direction of Gordon Greenberg (Holiday Inn, Guys And Dolls, Jacques Brel Is Alive And Well and Living In Paris).

Working will run at Southwark Playhouse from June 2 until July 8. For more details, see southwark-playhouse.co.uk and work-

Play aims to restore reputation of first celebrity Brummell

EMMY Award winner Ron Hutchinson (Rat In The Skull, Moonlight And Magnolias) has reinvigorated his acclaimed black comedy Beau Brummell – An Elegant Madness.

And the play, which casts light on the patron saint of dandies Beau Brummell (1778-1840) will be revived at the Jermyn Street Theatre 15 years after it was last performed in London.

Sean Brosnan (Doctor Who, The Forsyte Saga) and Richard Latham (Casualty, Some Mothers Do 'Ave 'Em) will bring the refreshed script to life – a text which resonates even more in today's celebrity-obsessed world.

Brummell was the original celebrity but is largely forgotten now.

He revolutionised fashion, style and attitude in the early 19th century – and Jermyn Street, Bond Street and Savile Row exist largely because of his patronage of London's tailors.

His legacy is celebrated in his statue on Jermyn Street.

It is the winter of 1819. The most stylish man of his day lives in exile in a madhouse in Calais.

The mind of George Bryan Brummell, known as The Beau, revels in past glories when he dominated the worlds of fashion, wit and dress.

He is convinced that his old friend and patron the Prince of Wales – now King George IV – will visit him and restore his position in society.

Today, the King is coming to Calais.

Brummell's valet, however, fired by revolutionary zeal, has other plans for the British monarch.

Director Peter Craze (Doctor Who, EastEnders, Blake's 7) said: "We are delighted to be bringing Ron Hutchinson's superb play back to Beau Brummell's spiritual home of Jermyn Street.

"Two years ago we dealt with the fall of another dandy in The Trials Of Oscar Wilde. Now we are telling the story of the original wit and man of fashion.

"Brummell once said that to be truly elegant, one should not be noticed. And now he is largely forgotten. We hope this production will go some way to restoring his reputation."

Brummell was the first man to be famous just for being famous but, like Oscar Wilde 70 years later, he had a tragic fall from grace.

Combining the grandeur of King Lear with the regency farce of Blackadder III, the play examines questions of class, style, romanticism, revolution, dementia and decay.

Beau Brummell – An Elegant Madness will run at the Jermyn Street Theatre from February 13 to March 11. For more details, visit jermynstreettheatre.co.uk.

A GALAXY of stars attended a ceremony at London's Cafe de Paris, where host Steve Furst announced the nominees for the 17th Annual WhatsOnStage Awards, the only major theatre prize-giving decided entirely by the theatregoers themselves, writes Nicky Sweetland.

The announcement of the nominations marked the opening of the final voting stage (closes January 31), with winners announced at the annual awards concert held on February 19 at The Prince of Wales Theatre.

WhatsOnStage's chief operating officer Sita McIntosh said: "It's fantastic to once again see the breadth and range of productions up and down the country acknowledged in this year's nominations.

"I think it's amazing that for the first time a play leads with 11 nominations; that's unheard of and reflective of the impact Harry Potter And The Cursed Child has had on the West End.

"An off-West End Production – The Boys In The Band, playing in a 200-seat venue – has secured four nominations including one for Ian Hallard as Best Actor in a Play up against the likes of Ian McKellen, Ralph Fiennes and Kenneth Branagh.

"And Ragtime, playing in the 265-seat Charing Cross Theatre, is nominated for Best Musical Revival alongside Sunset Boulevard, a show that played in a venue almost 10 times that size.

"In total, 48 productions have been nominated and it's heartening to have so many shows and so much talent recognised by the ticket-buying public. The WhatsOnStage Awards are a true indication of what the public enjoy at the theatre."

Harry Potter And The Cursed Child leads the field with 11 nominations – the first time a play has dominated the nominations. It is in the running for Best Actor in a Play for Jamie Parker, Best Supporting Actress in a Play nominations for both Noma Dumezweni and Poppy Miller and Best Supporting Actor in a Play nominations for Anthony Boyle and Paul Thornley, Best New Play, Best Direction nod for John Tiffany, Best Set Design for Christine Jones, Best Costume Design for Katrina Lindsay, Best Video Design for Finn Ross and Ash Woodward, and Lighting Design for Neil Austin.

Parker faces major competition for Best Actor in a Play from Branagh for The Entertainer, Ian Hallard for The Boys In The Band, Fiennes for Richard III and McKellen for No Man's Land.

Branagh's season receives four acting nominations. As well as for Branagh, Lily James is nominated for Best Actress in a Play for Romeo And Juliet, alongside Billie Piper for Yerma, Pixie Lott for Breakfast At Tiffany's and Michelle Terry for Henry V. And Derek Jacobi

Galaxy of stars in attendance as nominees revealed in WhatsOnStageAwards at London's Cafe de Paris and Meera Syal also receive nods for Best Supporting Actor and Actress in a Play for the same production.

Leading the musicals' charge are Tim Minchin's Groundhog Day and Half A Sixpence – both with seven nominations apiece – closely followed by Funny Girl and Aladdin with five nominations each, and Dreamgirls, which is currently in previews, with four.

It's been another strong year for producer Sonia Friedman whose productions total 20 nominations across three productions, Harry Potter And The Cursed Child, Dreamgirls and Funny Girl – the latter a co-production with the Menier Chocolate Factory who also received two nominations for Travesties (for Best Revival and Best Supporting Actor in a Play for Freddie Fox) which transfers to the West End next year.

Rising star Charlie Stemp receives his first WhatsOnStage nomination for Best Actor in a Musical for Half A Sixpence, with Andy Karl (Groundhog Day), Michael Xavier (Sunset Boulevard), Michael C Hall (Lazarus) and Ramin Karimloo (Murder Ballad). And in the Best Actress in a Musical category there looks to be a close run for the award between multi-WhatsOnStage Award-winning Sheridan Smith (Funny Girl), Amber Riley (Dreamgirls), Carrie Hope Fletcher (Chitty Chitty Bang Bang), Glenn Close (Sunset Boulevard) and Devon-Elise Johnson (Half A Sixpence).

For Best New Play, Jack Thorne's Harry Potter And The Cursed Child will fight off competition from the latest hit show from Mischief Theatre – The Comedy About A Bank Robbery, Annie Baker's The Flick, Florian Zeller's The Mother and Tony Kushner's The Intelligent Homosexual's Guide.

Sam Clemmett and Paul Thornley – both from Harry Potter And The Cursed Child – at the ceremony at London's Cafe de Paris Picture: Dan Woolner

And Best New Musical this year sees Groundhog Day, Aladdin, Half A Sixpence, Dreamgirls and School Of Rock compete for top honours.

The Best Musical Revival category looks to be a tough race between Funny Girl, Show Boat, Sunset Boulevard, Jesus Christ Superstar and Ragtime.

Best Play Revival sees The Boys In The Band, No Man's Land, The Deep Blue Sea, The Dresser and Travesties all nominated.

The Boys In The Band also makes the shortlist for Best Off-West End Production, up against The Last Five Years, Side Show, Ragtime and Grey Gardens.

Best West End Show sees a fight between the long-running favourites Les Miserables, Wicked, Phantom Of The Opera, Kinky Boots and Matilda.

Performances at the ceremony included the 16-strong cast of Rent performing Seasons Of Love to close the proceedings.

The 17th Annual WhatsOnStage Awards will be held in aid of adopted charity The Kevin Spacey Foundation – kevinspaceyfoundation.org.

An achingly funny catastrophe of good intentions

AFTER a highly acclaimed UK tour and New York run, Fringe First Award-winning Dirty Great Love Story makes its anticipated West End debut in a new production, at the Arts Theatre, in 2017.

Two hopeful, hapless romantics get drunk, get it on and then get the hell away from each other.

In her eyes, he's a mistake – a mistake who keeps turning up at parties. In his eyes, she's perfect. He's short-sighted.

It is an achingly funny romantic catastrophe of good intentions and bad timing that asks whether a one-night stand can last a lifetime.

Dirty Great Love Story combines drama and poetry in this laugh-a-minute exploration of modern romance.

Writers Richard Marsh and Katie Bonna said: "We're overjoyed that Dirty Great Love Story will be swaggering and spewing, loving and losing its way back to the stage.

"It's going to be a huge treat to see two other actors playing out our excruciating embarrassments, boozy triumphs and awkward romantic disasters.

"And perhaps the world could do with some love and laughter right now."

Marsh and Bonna write and perform together and separately, like Matt Damon and Ben Affleck. They began writing together due to both living in Tooting and sharing a love of love stories. Dirty Great Love Story was awarded a Scotsman Fringe First Award for outstanding new writing in 2012 and was shortlisted for both the Holden Street Theatre Award and the Brighton Fringe Award.

Bonna also received a nomination for the prestigious Stage Award for Best Actress at the Edinburgh Fringe 2012.

Marsh has since been selected as one of Time Out's most influential people in the arts and was crowned London's Poetry Slam Champion in 2012.

Dirty Great Love Story will run at the Arts Theatre from January 18 to March 18. For more details, visit DirtyGreatLoveStory.co.uk.

Talk of the town

MORE than 20 years since the world was first introduced to the late Jonathan Larson's groundbreaking theatrical work, his cult musical Rent has returned to the London stage, writes Nicky Sweetland.

The musical, first performed in New York in 1993 and is based on Puccini's La bohème, possibly holds even more relevance amidst our current political climate, with the issues of social inclusion, acceptance and tolerance right at the centre of the heartwarming story.

The new production, which is directed by Bruce Guthrie, has enjoyed a six-week UK tour prior to its opening at the St James Theatre next week and stars former X Factor finalist Lucie Jones in the pivotal role of Maureen, a political activist.

I caught up with Jones in her dressing room in Malvern before one of last week's shows and she told me: "Rent is about a group of struggling artists in New York City. They cover every sexual orientation, race and gender. It's full of characters and every song is a different genre of music. It's fun, it's enigmatic and it's a brilliant story about friendship, love and humanity. I love it."

Although Larson used Puccini's masterpiece as inspiration, the musical is also semi-autobiographical, as the composer lived in virtual poverty in the Big Apple and it includes many of his own experiences within the plot. The character of Maureen is also based on one of Larson's former girlfriends and she is known for her feisty and flirtatious attitude, something that Jones is rejoicing in getting to grips with.

Jones said: "It's exhausting but it's brilliant fun because she's a brilliant character. I do something different with her every day, which is so nice to be able to do; in theatre you quite often can't do that. She's so off the wall and, well, she's crazy, and I'm having a great time playing her every night."

Disney Frozen star Idina Menzel originated the role both in the original Broadway production and in the 2005 film version. Menzel's version of the duet Take Me Or Leave Me has become a standard within musical-theatre circles. However, Jones said that her take on Maureen is very different from Menzel's portrayal.

Jones said: "She was the original Maureen but the director gave me the job because he said I didn't do it anything like her when I went in for my audition."

The story is set within 1980s New York, under the shadow of HIV/AIDS. The group's dreams, losses and love stories weave through the musical's narration to paint a stunningly raw and emotional portrait of the gritty bohemian world.

Jones said: "It's so relevant to what's going on in the world now, particularly for my character because she's an activist and she's fighting for the greater good. She isn't specifically talking about the things we are struggling with now but it is almost directly related to them."

Jones has noted how much audiences have drawn parallels between the show and our present-day social struggles, with many theatregoers experiencing the now-classic musical for the first time and realising its important message.

"It's been amazing that this has all been happening while we've been on tour and the conversations we've had with audience members about its relevance have been amazing," she said. "It really is as relevant now as the day it was written."

Rent began previews at the St James Theatre on December 8 and runs until January 28. For more details, visit rentonstage.co.uk.

Beautifully performed but bewildering

Buried Child
Trafalgar Studios
****

WITH a catalogue of sordid family secrets at its centre, Buried Child by Sam Shepard is an uncomfortable and yet compelling drama, writes Nicky Sweetland.

Hollywood legend Ed Harris stars as Dodge, a decaying former farmer, who is choking with his resentment towards life.

While he surreptitiously sips on a concealed bottle of liquor he has almost become another item of living-room furniture.

His sharp-tongued spouse Halie (Harris' real wife Amy Madigan) noisily mourns the passing of their son Ansel, while their surviving offspring – aggressive amputee Bradley (Gary Sheldford) and tormented Tilden (Barnaby Kay) – devastatingly display the manifestations of earlier traumas.

The portrayal of an all-American dysfunctional fam-

Ed Harris in Buried Child,
Trafalgar Studios
Picture: Johan Persson

ily feels, at first, perfectly acceptable – that is until they are paid a visit by Dodge's grandson Vince (Jeremy Irvine) and his girlfriend Shelley (Charlotte Hope), who, after a harrowing introduction, ensures the true horrors of the past become apparent.

When I say they become apparent, that is not entirely true.

Although beautifully performed, some of Shepard's plot twists are just a bit too cryptic and I was, at times, bewildered.

Harris gives a monumental performance as the fading patriarch, while Hope is equally impressive as the sweet and feisty Shelley.

There is a haunting hunger to Madigan's grieving Halie and both Sheldford and Kay provide formidable portrayals, which leave a feeling of disquiet in the auditorium. Irvine's demise into anarchy, facilitated by Derek McLane's clever set design, is painfully potent and the depth of the three-act play is revealed within the final moments.

Baffling at times and yet thoroughly captivating, Buried Child is a powerful piece of theatre but should come with a debrief so audiences can further understand the implications of the story they have witnessed.

Buried Child continues at Trafalgar Studios until February 18. For more details, visit buriedchildplay.co.uk/?gclid=CJiJ2\_vm1dACFYdAGwodPYEDPg.

Liver cancer claims life of member of Blues' first championship-winning team

FORMER Chelsea winger Peter Brabrook, a member of the club's first championship-winning team, has died from liver cancer at the age of 79.

Brabrook, who was snared from under the nose of his local club West Ham United by Chelsea scout Jimmy Thompson, made his debut for Ted Drake's side as a 17-year-old in March 1955.

Brabrook said: "Ted was a very honest man, fair but hard. He demanded everything and used to smash cups on the walls in the dressing room. He ruled by fear but his record as a player at Arsenal before the war was beyond compare.

"I remember one training session in the rain at Stamford Bridge when we were putting in crosses for heading practice and Ted arrived in a bespoke suit with a silk tie and new shoes. He looked immaculate. Anyway, we didn't take much notice until we heard him shout 'F***** head it!' and before we knew it he was making his way through the mud to the penalty area, shouting 'Put one in'. When the cross was whipped in he went flying through the air and absolutely battered this ball into the back of the net before landing in a pile of mud which covered him from head to toe. 'That's how you head a ball'.

"He would punch himself in the centre of his forehead to show everyone where to head the ball. Deep down, though, he had a wonderful heart.

"I was one of his favourites, along with Roy Bentley and Frankie Bluntstone. Basically, he loved anyone who would put a shift in and he really looked after me when I was called up to do my national service."

Despite Brabrook playing in two more games before the title was clinched in May 1955, The Football England caps – alongside Fulham's Johnny Haynes – against the Soviet Union in the World Cup finals at Gothenburg, Sweden. His other two appearances were both away to Northern Ireland later that year and Spain in 1960.

League deemed he was not entitled to receive a First Division winners' medal.

But recognition came in the summer of 1958, when he gained the first of his three

Over the course of eight seasons Greenwich-born Brabrook scored 57 goals in 271 games in all competitions before the arrival of Tommy Docherty provoked a move across the capital.

"We didn't see eye to eye but, then again, no-one liked him. He just wasn't anyone's cup of tea. He didn't want me to go to another London club but I knew that Ron Greenwood wanted me at West Ham."

Brabrook left SW6 in the summer of 1962 in a £35,000 deal. It was a hefty fee at the time but Hammers' manager Greenwood, also a member of Chelsea's league-winning side, knew what he was buying.

The tricky right-winger proved excellent value by playing 214 league and cup matches, scoring 43 goals, in a successful six-year spell that included his cross for Ron Boyce to head the winning goal in the 1964 FA Cup final against Preston.

Brabrook left Upton Park in the summer of 1968 to complete his league career with their near-neighbours Orient, where he made a further 72 league and nine cup appearances (six goals) and played a key role in the Brisbane Road club's Third Division championship-winning side of 1969-70.

Brabrook had one season with Southern League side Romford before hanging up his boots at the end of 1971-72 to go into coaching and management with Ford United and Billericay Town.

He rejoined West Ham as a youth coach and had been scouting for the East London club in recent years.

Brabrook had suffered a liver tumour and died in St Luke's Hospice, Basildon – not far from his Laindon Hills, Essex home – last Saturday. He leaves a son, Wayne, and daughter, Donna, plus grandchildren Daisy, Rosie and Peter.

Rangers rocked by Chelsea loanee

NOW even Rotherham United, who are by far the worst team in the Championship, stopped handing out early Christmas gifts on the day Queens Park Rangers visited South Yorkshire.

In fact the managerless Millers, marooned 13 points from the safety line and rock bottom of the second tier, turned Scrooge on their lacklustre visitors by keeping only their second clean sheet in 20 matches this season – since beating Rangers' West London neighbours Brentford by the same 1-0 scoreline on August 20. Bah humbug!

Immediately after his third consecutive defeat since returning to the club, their worst losing run since Harry Redknapp was in charge in February 2014, QPR manager Ian Holloway said: "It's a horrible feeling. I hate losing games, as we all do.

"The second half didn't promise as much as the first half. And I think that's what disappointed us all – the fans included."

Rotherham, under the temporary custody of caretaker manager Paul Warne, claimed their first win in 16 matches – and only their second of a miserable season – when Izzy Brown, on loan from Chelsea, netted his third of the campaign, scoring in the 24th minute.

"The goal changed the game and then we allowed them to hang on to their lead far too easily. That's what disappointed me," said Holloway.

"Our shoulders dropped after the goal and that needs to change."

Ian Holloway's expression sums up gloomy times at QPR
Picture: Rob Newell

There were reportedly at least 825 QPR supporters at the New York Stadium but they must have wished they were freezing amid the bright lights of NYC after seeing their team lose to Rotherham for the first time since Emlyn Hughes was in charge there in March 1982.

Holloway said: "I want to apologise to the fans who travelled here in great numbers.

"We didn't produce the 90-minute performance I was hoping for.

"I thought we did well in the first half. If we'd have got a goal in that first period, I'm sure we'd have got something from the game.

"The goal was poorly conceded. You can't concede like that from a throw-in. That was very disappointing. We had three or four players who could've stopped it but we don't make things easy for ourselves.

"We created chances and looked a threat in the first half. But the lack of chance creation in the second half was very disappointing."

The bare statistics don't lie. Although QPR enjoyed the majority of possession (66 per cent), it was Rotherham who had more shots – 17, and 10 on target.

It's not as if the next couple of fixtures hold much promise for beleaguered Rangers, who have slipped to 18th, three points off the relegation zone.

Derby County, flourishing on an impressive six-match winning run under new boss Steve McClaren, visit Loftus Road tomorrow night looking to cement their place in the top five.

On Sunday (noon), 13th-placed Aston Villa visit W12 buoyed by their late 1-0 victory over Wigan Athletic last weekend, having lost only one of their last seven matches under Steve Bruce.

And on December 27 (12.30pm), Rangers travel to Brighton & Hove Albion, who are hanging on to the coattails of leaders Newcastle United, a point off top spot.

With only one win from his side's last seven games, Holloway has challenged his players to show more belief.

"They are very disappointed," he said. "They need to believe in themselves a bit more and show a bit more commitment to doing the things we are practising on the training ground.

"We look like we are taking big hits when we concede. We've got to just get on with it and show a bit more belief."

Gary Cahill and Diego Costa have had plenty to celebrate in recent months, as Blues continue to top the table and the Spanish striker heads the Premier League scorechart

Picture: Rob Newell

Cahill credits 'on fire' Costa

Diego rivals Didier for cult hero status at Blues

By Paul Lagan

CHELSEA defender Gary Cahill reckons goal-scoring sensation Diego Costa is the best striker in the world and has elevated himself to almost the same legendary status of former Blues hero Didier Drogba.

Costa, who scored the sensational winner that downed dour West Bromwich Albion at Stamford Bridge on Sunday to extend Chelsea's winning run to nine matches and keep them three points clear at the head of the Premier League, is now top of the scoring charts with 12 league goals – so it's no surprise that the Brazil-born Spain striker is highly valued by Cahill and the Blues faithful.

Cahill said: "At this moment in time he is right up there (among the best) in world football with the other clinical finishers.

"The statistics don't lie and he keeps proving himself with his goals. We just hope that continues for us.

"Everyone is playing well, that's the most positive thing. He is getting the goals which are important to us but everyone is contributing to this run.

"Everyone is playing really well, individually, at the moment and that's what's giving us the success that we're having."

The England centre-back has also played with legendary striker Drogba at Chelsea and recognises that the fans are starting to love Costa just as much as they adore the Ivorian star.

"Yes, of course, because he is banging goals in every week," said Cahill. "He is winning us matches.

"Didier was a huge figure, goal-scoring wise, and with his personality on and off the pitch.

"You need strikers like that at Chelsea and Diego has fitted into that role nicely. Since he's been at the club he's scored goals – but this season he's on fire."

Costa's goalscoring has never been in question, unlike his temperament and discipline – but he has not had a booking since the defeat to Arsenal in September and one more yellow card before the end of the year could lead to a suspension. Has Cahill seen any change in him?

"He is exactly the same fella," said the 30-year-old Derbyshire-born centre-back. "The same guy from when he first came to the club.

"But he is not getting as frustrated as he usually would. I could see in the first half against West Brom that he was getting a little bit frustrated but he is channelling his energy in the right direction now.

"He has been patient, because he knows if he gets one chance he will stick it away."

Sunday's dull game was deadlocked, with neither side creating any clear chances of note, until the 76th minute, when Costa chased a harmless-looking ball from Cesc Fabregas into the right-sided channel.

His presence was enough to unsettle Albion defender Gareth McAuley – and although the angle was acute, Costa's left-foot strike flew into the roof of the net.

"His goal was the result of work-rate, effort and class rolled into one moment," said Cahill. "He had no right to score that goal whatsoever. The next minute it's in the top corner. That's just how he has been playing this season."

The hard-earned victory and seventh clean sheet in nine league games leaves Blues three points clear of second-placed Arsenal. Did Cahill derive more satisfaction from this latest result compared to the flair that produced high-scoring wins against Manchester United (4-0) and Everton (5-0)?

"A win is a win for us," he said. "But I think it does prove how hard it is to get three points in this league.

"Personally, you work so hard to get three points, which is how it should be. They made it tough, we knew that they were going to sit in.

"They played direct at times, wasted a bit of time too. It proved difficult but we got the goal."

Chelsea have shown that they can win ugly as well as with class, which serves as a warning to their title rivals.

Cahill said: "It was difficult to break them down. The longer the game went (without Chelsea scoring), the more confidence they had to keep a clean sheet. They got bodies behind the ball – it proved difficult.

"The manager went to a four (at the back) when we got our goal. We switched to 4-4-2, then back to a five, so we had different solutions.

"We worked well, kept patient to get the goal and then found the brilliance (from Costa).

"The game needed a bit of individual brilliance, because they were so well organised, and that's exactly what happened."

A lot of talk this season has been on shapes and formation – and at Chelsea it is no different. But Cahill said they had not been working on a specific formation to counter West Brom.

"No, we have been working on the shape we have been playing since the Arsenal (defeat)," he said.

"So I think it's easy for the lads to adapt back to a 4-4-2 – it's natural for everybody to play in that system.

"The thing we have been working on is the formation we have adapted to now. It was quite easy to switch and we went back late in the game to a five, which gave us that extra bit of protection when they were pushing people forward."

Chelsea have two away games coming up, tomorrow at Sunderland and against Crystal Palace on Saturday (12.30pm), before returning to Stamford Bridge on Boxing Day to face AFC Bournemouth (3pm).

All three matches are eminently winnable, so is there a sense that Chelsea are unbeatable at the moment?

Cahill was typically coy about giving a "Yes" or "No" answer but is clearly happy with the way things are working out.

"It's a nice feeling when you go into a game off the back of the winning record and statistics we have," he said.

"We are scoring goals and keeping clean sheets for fun. It takes that pressure away from you collectively as a group. The forwards aren't feeling lots of pressure to score lots of goals. It's working.

"It's a good feeling to go out with the confidence in the players and in the squad that we've got and try to deliver the performances and results we have been doing.

Floyd Ayite scored his first Fulham goals on Saturday – against Wolves, including the last-gasp equaliser

Picture: Rob Newell

Molineux mayhem ends level

Focus on Craven Cottage

AN eight-goal thriller for the fans or a manager's nightmare? It depends on your standpoint.

Fulham head coach Slavisa Jokanovic certainly didn't take any pre-Christmas cheer from Saturday's 4-4 draw at Wolverhampton Wanderers, even though his team salvaged a point in injury-time.

The Serb was left scratching his head in bemusement after seeing his side come from behind, only to surrender a 3-1 lead.

"I don't know how to react after this," said Jokanovic. "We were leading 3-1 and after that we nearly lost the game.

"Then after that we battled back. I don't know whether the feeling I have is whether we lost today or we won."

Perhaps someone should have clarified for him the fact that this ridiculous match ended all square. It made about as much sense as Fulham abandoning their white shirts to wear red against a team in their traditional amber, which bizarrely caused more of a colour clash than would have been the case had they both turned out in their usual kits.

Reinvigorated by their 2-1 win at Queens Park Rangers, Wolves led after 22 minutes through Kortney Hause's header. Stefan Johansen levelled 10 minutes later with a first-time, right-foot shot into the top-left corner.

Fulham then struck twice more in the space of three minutes. Floyd Ayite rose at the far post to score his first goal since joining the club, and then Tom Cairney volleyed superbly into the top corner from the edge of the box – a prime contender for the club's goal of the season.

The visitors were looking good for their fifth away win of the season in the Championship but crumbled under a second-half onslaught.

Two goals in nine minutes, from Matt Doherty and Ivan Cavaleiro, brought Wolves level before the home side thought they had snatched victory when Dave Edwards made it 4-3 in the 90th minute.

Fulham had the last word on an amazing Black Country afternoon, though, when Ayite headed the dramatic late equaliser from inside the six-yard box.

An exasperated Jokanovic recognised familiar failings when he said: "Generally, we controlled many things. We could have scored more goals and been more clinical again.

"We did not kill the game. We had many crosses into the box and they were stronger than us. We did not manage our situation very well in the last half an hour.

"If we want to be a more competitive and important team, we need to find a solution to this kind of approach.

"We conceded two very simple goals. I don't know why it caused so many problems.

"In this situation we need to be more solid. We expected this kind of situation and we have to improve that side of the game."

Fulham will be expected to return to winning ways when Rotherham United visit Craven Cottage tonight.
